I thought all the time to see an opening. Every few steps I took I fell down, with leaves, and having the appearance of firm ground). I shouted as long as I could, but it was no good. I found plenty of rain-water, but no food that I could trust. There were plenty of berries, but I did not know what kind they were, and feared to eat them, as they might be poisonous. It is not true I ate berries. There was nothing noteworthy ecurred Saturday; the whole day passing in that manner. When night began to come on gain I remember feeling a dread as to the other match. I was not sure but I had lost it. After a search I found it in the corner of a pocket. I built a camp-fire in the same way as on Friday night, fortunately succeeding in lighting the circulars with the bit of match. Then I began to gather up firewood for the night. I could not sleep. The noises of the woods and my thoughts kept me awake. After some time I managed to doze a little. and woke, cold, to find my fire going out. All around was black, dark. All the loose dry wood was burnt, and I had to go into the roods a space to find timber. I proceeded to what looked like some logs, and was just reaching/my hand out when I was startled by nearing a deep growl and seeing a big black ear in front of me. He was rising erect on his hind legs, one arm secured by his side, and the other ready to stretch out. For an instant neither stirred. Probably not appear hungry for man's flesh. I did not touch him. I am afraid to think what might have happened if I had. I moved back and he lay still, but growled. Then I quickly got a firebrand and threw at him, and fancy

I fancied it likely there would be some logging shanty on the firm side, and that is why I coasted it. After I had followed the bank awhile, to my joy I came to a camp, which, however, was uninhabited. salt. After eating three of the potatoes raw, and feeling some benefit from the repast, I concluded to go further down the creek, arguing that it must lead somewhere, and made a raft of some of the tim bers, on which I rafted down about three miles, and struck dense bush and weeds which prevented my raft going further. I had a paddle in my hand, and left the raft with it. Something told me I had better go back. There was a stack of hay near the

Everything in the shape of are dead; and the Lord have mercy on governmental affairs needs reformation, your soul. I do beg your pardon. I am and every time Democracy is the only party pure enough to bring it about.
The thief, when pursued by the officers of the law, will oftentimes direct public attention from his own efforts to escape by crying at the top of his voice: "Stop, thief! stop, thief!" So Democracy, driven from its fields of plunder and closely pursued by the moral sentiment of the country, endeavors to divert the right-cous punishment which is being inflicted upon it to an innocent party by crying out " Reform! reform! we must have re-
