held on that day the subject of Dist.-Atty. Fisher's official conduct was under discussion, and the conclusion was unanimousreached that he should be requested to resign after he had been allowed sufficient time to complete the business then pending in his office. It is said the President in asking the Attorney-Gento suspend his request for Fisher's resignation had merely desired to afford the latter an opportunity to reply to the complaints against him. The charges against the Interior Department were also, it is stated, fully discussed, the President expressing in strong terms his confidence in Secretary Delano's capacity, integrity and faithfulness as an officer, and assuring the Cabinet that he would not allow the attacks on Delano to injure him the least in-his opinion until the charges of his dishonesty should be fully proven. ONE of the most interesting features of the excavations in the buried city of Pompeii is the discovery of many homely dofrying-pans, lamps, lamp-stands, fleshhooks, braziers for charcoal-in a word, of Roman antiquity. SLOWLY the night is falling, Falling down from the hill, And all in the low green valley The dew lies heavy and chill; The crickets cry in the bedges, And the bats are circling low And like ghosts through the blosson The glimmering night-moths go.

Hand in hand through the twillight

Come the children every one, Flushed with their eager frolic, Tawny with wind and sun; Home from the sunny uplands Where the sweet wild berries grow, Home from the tangled thickets Where the nuts are ripening slow. They mock at the owl's weird laughter And the cricket's lonesome cry, At the tardy swallows flying Late through the darkening sky; And silently gliding after, Through the dusk of the shadowy street,

Comes their little angel sister, Star white from her head to her feet— Never crossing the threshold, Come they early or late; With her empty hands on her bosom, She stops at the cottage gate. I stretch out my arms in longing, But she fades from my aching sight, As a little white cloud at morning Vanishes into the light.

And spite of the shining garments Folded about her now, And spite of the deathless beauty Crowning her lip and brow,
I wish for one passionate moment
She sat on my knee again;
On her feet, so spotless and tender,
The dust and the earthly stain.

The bitterest thought must be That safe with her blessed kindred The child hath no need of me; And counting her heavenly birthdays, I say in my jealous care: The babe that lay on my bosom Hath grown to a maiden fair; "And now if out of the glory
