The cowslips spring in the marshes, And the reses bloom on the hill; And beside the prook in the pastures. The herds go feeding at will. The children have gone and left them;

They sit in the sun alone;
And the old wife's cars are failing.
And she barks to the well known tone That won her heart in her girlhood. That has soothed her in many a care, And p aises her now for the trightness

Her o'd face used to wear, She thinks again of her bridal-How, dressed in her robe of white, She stood by her gay young love

In the morning's rosy light.

Oh! the morning is rosy as ever. But the rose from her cheek has fled; And the sunshine still is golden But it falls on a silvered head.

And the girlhood dreams, once vanished Till her feeble pulses tremble With the thrill of Spring time prime

And looking forth from the window She thinks how the trees have grown Since, clad in her bridal whiteness, She crossed the old door stone. Though dimmed her eye's bright axure.

And dimmed her bais's young go The love in her girlhood plighted Has never grown aim nor old. They sat in their place in the sunshine, Till the day was almost done; And then, at its close, an angel Stole over the threshold stone.

He folded their hands together-He touched their eyelios with balm; And their last breath floated upward, Like the close of a solemn psaim

Like a bridal pair they traversed Whose builder and maker is God."
