SOUTH PLATTE.

Without making invidious comparisons, we believe it to be the generally received opinion of the people of this state that the portion of Nebraska known as "South Platte", owing to earlier and more numerous settlements, cultivates more acres than any section of similar size in the state, and necessarily produces more; but all the surplus products of this vast region are forced into eastern markets, and utterly debarred from the best market in the west by the refusal of the Union Pacific R. R. Co. to receive it in the Cars of any other Railroad Co., unless it pays the same rates which that Co. tenant Sturgis, a son of Gen'l. Sturgis, charges at Omaha.
