NUTS, CANDIES, TEAS SUGARS, TOBACCOES, FLOUR, I Miss Thee.

I miss thee. I miss thee, my darling, The light in the sky Is never so golden, my darling, As when thou art nigh. The tender wild flowers are springing All over the earth; And birds in the woodlands are singing With musical micth. But over my spirit is brooding

A sorrow to-day;

Delightedly stray;

The thought is forever intruding That thou art away. I miss thee, I miss thee, my darling, The bright spring is here; But not half so welcomed, my darling, As when thou wert near. With blushes, as rosy as morning, The peach blossoms glow; The wild plum her brow is adorning With buds, white as snow,

The bees o'er the sweet-scented flowers

But dreary to me are the hours, For thou art away. I miss thee, I miss thee, beloved, The genial sunshine Is filling all spirits, beloved, With gladness, but mine. The zephyr's light pinions are shaking

And purple-eyed violets waking Wherever they pass. The turtle-dove coos to her lover, And chides his delay: My heart sayeth, over and over, Thou, too, art away.

The dow from the grass;

The odorous breeze Is whispering tenderly, dear one, His love to the trees The brooklet, while madly and fleetly He rushes along. Is chanting, how wildly and sweetly! A routurous source.

I miss thee, I miss thee, my dear one,

The great heart of nature beats gladly
