The Brick Oven.

BY JOHN S. ADAMS.

I remember the pasture bespangled with poplars. I remember the field gray with tassels of corn. The hedge where in childhood I sought the wild rose.

MISS VERNEY LOVED NATURE.

She was the habit of rambling alone through the woods in search of botanical specimens and other curiosities. One day she wandered farther than usual.

MISS VERNEY'S CHOICE.

Chester Vaughan loved Edna Verney. She was a high toned, flattered beauty, who had fled from fashionable follies for a short time to the quiet of an obscure Hampshire village.

West Point has scandal cases in court and the Republican don't publish the particulars.

Adams County is troubled with horse thieves.

Mr. O'Neill, of Plattsmouth, father of Mrs. Bodien, surprised his children at supper, Wednesday evening.

A private letter received by Mr. Hubbard from Lord Jones, dated at his home in England, says that the horse and buggy taken from Nebraska to that country attracted great attention.

The Government Headquarters have been located finally at the Barracks near Omaha.

Postmaster R. O. Adams of Deadwood, Black Hills, has been removed. His successor has not yet been appointed.

Many of our citizens will remember Captain Johnson who formerly lived here, and excited both interest and sympathy by the position in which he was forced to keep his body by reason of a severe wound received in the army.

Edna had strange fits of musing. One evening, when she had spent half an hour gazing into vacancy, her uncle rallied her on her abstraction.

"Don't you expect Mr. Vaughan this evening?" he asked. "I notice that he has power to brighten you up wonderfully. Confess now, Edna, wouldn't you marry him if he were in your 'set,' as you call it?"

Edna never knew what impelled her to speak, but she answered promptly, "I would marry him as he is, and call myself the happiest girl on earth, if he loved me, and asked me to do so."

Chester Vaughan, just stepping over the low doorway in the purple twilight, heard the words with a glad thrill at his heart.

He never paused, but stepped up to her, and in the presence of the wonderful couple, said, "I love you, Edna. Will you be my wife?"

She had known what was in his heart for her from the first, and was not surprised.

She put her hands in his, and answered, simply, "Yes."

"Just what I have been hoping for," said Mr. Browning. "But, bless me, if I don't think that Edna almost popped the question herself!"

"Nonsense, uncle! I'm sure I've had a real straightforward proposal, in your hearing, too-haven't I?" turning to her lover.

"Certainly you have. But I am too happy to discuss trifles. I've won my wife-that's all I can realize."

When the engagement was known there was quite a flutter among Edna's fashionable friends.

"I always knew she would do some irregular thing-eh-eh-so strange," said one.

"Quite a scandalous proceeding-to marry a sooty engineer!" said another.

But one day this paragraph appeared in a daily paper-

"Mr. Vaughan, who is likely to realize a handsome fortune by a wonderful invention in connection with the steam engine, is shortly to marry Miss Verney. We understand there was quite a romance attending the courtship."

Miss Verney's choice rose into popular favor at once.

In the refined and cultured circle that received them there were no men more distinguished looking, more manly in the essential element of manhood, than Mr. Chester Vaughan.

The foundation schools of England at Eton, Winchester, Westminster, Shrewsbury, Rugby, Harrow, Charterhouse, St. Paul's School, and Merchant Taylors' School, the "sacred nine," as they have been not infrequently designated. They were founded within a period ranging from the close of the fourteenth century to the beginning of the seventeenth; from the reign of Richard II. to that of James I. Winchester, the earliest, is older by several generations than the Reformation, and the revival of classical literature in England. Eton, founded by Henry VI., half a century later, was modelled after Winchester. Westminster is one of the many grammar schools originally established in connection with the cathedrals and conventual establishments for which provision was made by Henry VIII. after the dissolution of the monasteries. Harrow, Rugby, Shrewsbury, Merchant Taylors', and St. Paul's are among the mustered schools founded in the sixteenth century either by grants of church lands direct from the Crown, or by private persons, generally of the middle class, who, conscious of the up-hill fight they had had in childhood and early life, were determined to give to those coming after them the means of overcoming such difficulties.

The game of backgammon is known to have existed more than a thousand years before Christ.
