Domestic Diplomacy. She was watching at the window. As I hurried down the street, In the simple brown merino That I fancy took so well.

Not the children were all quiet, And the heart was very bright, And my pet—our roguish Charlie— Was quite feral in his white.

My chair was near the fire, And my slippers by its side— My pipe was very handy, And my papers open wide.

And when the meal was over, And the inner man at rest, She drew her chair beside me, With the baby on her breast.

Oh! the smile of tender radiance That illumined all his face, As I clasped her to my bosom, In a lover's fond embrace.

Mrs. Doan welcomed to her home the daughter of her old time friend. "I shall not let you leave me, Laura, at least until you gain some rose color in your cheeks," she said, as she clasped her to her heart with a warm, loving embrace.

Laura was indeed a lovely girl, possessing a harmonious combination of lady-like reserve, and fascinating manners, polished and improved by a fair education.

Soon after her arrival, Mrs. Newcomb gave a large party for the purpose of introducing Miss Ash, the city belle, to which the elite of the town were invited.

Miss Ash assumed herself during the evening by criticizing the company in low tones to Annie.

"Heavens!" she exclaimed, "if there is a dressmaker, Laura Hastings! Upon my soul don't introduce me, for I'm not accustomed to meeting sewing girls in select circles."

Sara Montford, dear, good girl as she was, observing her embarrassment, hastened to her side, and drawing her into a quiet corner near a low window, sought to calm her agitation.

A loud whisper was heard from behind the heavy velvet that draped the window, which they recognized as the voice of Annie Newcomb.

"Now that we are alone, Miss Ash, I mean to confide my sorrows to you. Before that low-bred working girl came here, I had reason to think that our rector was in love with me; but now she manages to monopolize him altogether."

"Really, Annie, I have observed that there seems to be quite a 'pulling of caps' for the rector, and I am glad to see that you are so well satisfied with your handsome, quite stylish I should say. Now don't fret, pet, I'll manage this little matter for you, never fear. But can't you spare your Adonis to me, for a short flirtation? Not that I want a insignificant country parson for a husband, but I am sick and tired of my hat."

"When they returned home that night, Laura related all that had passed to Mrs. Doan.

"Laura," she replied, "I honor you all the more for your labor of love. It was only a few days since that I learned that you supported your dear mother by the labor of those small white hands of yours. Now, I begin to realize the real character of these girls. What they think or say of you is of very little consequence—you must forget it—I love you, dear, and wish to see you happy."

Then she went down stairs, late as it was, and calling Mr. Hayward, told him all that she knew of Laura's unselfish ministrations.

"An unprovoked insult!" exclaimed that lady; "but I think that I understand it."

"Mrs. Doan answered it for Laura, and the answer fell like a thunder-bolt upon the Newcomb family. This is what they read:

"Laura Hastings labored cheerfully for the maintenance and comfort of her invalid mother, who died leaving a blessing for her unselfish daughter. After her father's death, I unfortunately lost sight of them, and their pride prevented them from seeking me. Laura, noble girl, was left to struggle alone, and unassisted. But now she is no longer dependent upon her own exertions, for as my acknowl-

Death of Hon. Frank Welch. Special to the Omaha Daily Republican. WISNER, NEB., September 5. The death of Hon. Frank Welch causes universal sadness here. A messenger reports that on yesterday morning Mr. Welch drove from Norfolk to Neligh to confer with citizens about certain desired changes in mail routes.

Miss Ash fairly screamed with vexation and mortification. Annie Newcomb fainted.

Courage in Every-Day Life. Have the courage to discharge a debt while you have the money in your pocket.

Have the courage to speak your mind when it is necessary you should do so, and hold your tongue when it is prudent you should do so.

Have the courage to tell a man why you will not lend him your money. Have the courage to cut the most agreeable acquaintance you have, when you are convinced that he lacks principle.

Have the courage to show that you respect honesty, in whatever guise it appears; and your contempt for dishonest duplicity, by whomsoever exhibited.

Have the courage to obey your Maker at the risk of being ridiculed by men. Have the courage to prefer comfort and prosperity to fashion in all things.

Have the courage to provide entertainment for your friends within your means—and beyond them. Exercise for the body, occupation for the mind—these are the grand constituents of health and happiness.
