The Homestead on the Hill.

I'm : pinster lone and old, And my hair is stroaked with gray, And my life wears on as dull and cold As a cheerless Winter-day; And often, at early night, When the house is dusk and still, I sit and watch the gleams of light From the homestend on the hid.

The one that beams first of all

Shines out through the open door, Lilumes the length and breadth of the hall, From ceiling unto floor; It gleams out into the night, And down to the garden-gate While just within the warm flood of light. Do eager children wait.

They wait for the father's tread, They wait for the father's kiss, For the loving touch of his hand on the head. And the smile that they never miss; Their frolicing forms I see. As they dance with a merry din; They laugh and they shout with a childish glee, As they welcome the father in. And next, in the family room, Where the table is spread for tea, The evening-lamp drives off the gloom, And the gathering shadows fice, And then, in the room above, Where the baby is in its nest. I seem to hear the murmur of love That hushes it to its rest.

Then I draw my curtain down, And I think of a day gone by When my life was young and my hair was brown. And my hopeful heart beat high; When a youth came wooing me, But I turned away and said, "Such a humdrum life would weary me,

And I do not care to well."

'Tis strange I can now recall,

Ev'ry tone as he said good-bye: For years I thought of him searce at all As I roamed 'nesth a foreign sky; For I journeyed far and wide, And of novelty had my fill, And I smiled to hear that he'd brought his bride To the hom stead on the hill. Ah, well! that is long since o'er,

The lovilest scene can charm no more When the hopes of the heart are fled, And so, as the night comes in. Do I sit in the dark and chill. And word r and dream what my life find leven In the homestead on the hill.

Does Your Farming Pay? Put the question, says X. Y. Z. in an haps he will tell you be thinks farming does pay. Possibly he will answer "I think not," but very probably if he says run him) for twenty years to come, he will never know the exact cost of his gain or a loss to him; perhaps he may guess but he doesn't know. Farmers, open your eyes, and know what you are about! When you plant corn, estimate what the use of your land 58 25 is worth; estimate the worth of your time 5 00 spent in preparing the land and in tend-95 ing the crop; estimate the value of seed and fertilizers used. Put all down in 30 00 writing and when you have harvested the crop, estimate what it is worth. You can 50 00 easily find out your exact gain or loss. Keep an account with each crop you raise; keep an account with your hens G S Smith, legal services.... 50 00 and your hogs.
