It is a somewhat interesting fact in this connection, that the superiority of the work of our wood engravers was admitted abroad, whilst it was being questioned and doubted at home.

The London "Saturday Review" has recently said, "the impartial critic who is asked where the best wood-cuts are produced has, we fear, but one answer possible-neither in England, Germany nor France, but in America." For the proof of the truth of this "reluctant admission" he asks "a comparison of any recent number of Scribner's Monthly and the "Cornhill." If we have a World's Fair in New

Of churches with crooked spires, the most noteworthy is the famous one at Chesterfield, in Derbyshire. It leans six feet toward the south, and four feet height is 230 feet. So peculiar is the distorted appearance of this steeple that it is said to appear to be falling toward the spectator from whatever point he approaches it. There are several traditions extant respecting this singular architectural deformity. One is that the builder, a native of Chesterfield, having agreed to erect a church, did so, finishing the tower without adding a spire. The authorities of the town, not being satisfied with the structure, appealed to the Attorney-General, who gave his opinion that the spire was as much a part of the church as the tower, and that consequently the builder must finish his contract by itsaddition. The subject was, however, fully discussed at a meeting of the Institute of British Architects in January, 1855, and it was ascertained that the oak planks on Reference is here made to an editor- which the framework on which the ial in the present number of Scribner's Monthly, under the head of "Topics of the Time," and entitled "The Purchase of Pictures—a Proposition.
