THE HERALD.

Three Portraits.

I—A REFORMER.

With tangled beard and rolling eye,
I'm longs for something to defy.

To-night, in dictatorial state,
On marriage he will fulminate.

Next week, with oratoric hand,
He sweeps religion from the land.

But always his devotion hot
Befriends the workingman's low lot.

His little drudging, failed wife
Has clothed and fed him half his life.

And yet (ah, solve it, ye who can!)
His heart bleeds for the workingman!

II.—AN OLD BEAU.

How cracked and poor his laughter rings!
How dulled his eye, once flashing warm!
But still a court'y pathos clings
About his bent and withered form.

To night, as mirthful music swells,
With wrinkled cheeks and locks of snow,
He meets the grandsons of the belles
He smiled on forty years ago!

We watch him here, and half believe
Our gaze may witness, while he prates,
Death, like a footman touch his sleeve,
And tell him that the carriage waits.

III.—A GRUMBLER.

For him no statesman thinks aright,
No painter charms; no poet glows;
The lily is a shade too white,
Inadequately red the rose;
And every scheme by which men live
Is valueless and tentative.

Such disapproval he reveals
Of all accepted laws and plans,
One almost fancies that he feels
Angry at fate's restricting bans,
Because he cannot rule alone
Some private planet of his own!

A FAIR EXCHANGE.

BY F. G.

"Such heaps of them," said Phyllis, "and doing nobody any good!"

The golden summer sunshine was steeping all the upland in yellow brightness, and the wild strawberries for which the Leigh woods are so famous came freighting the air with sweetness. Such strawberries too—great blooming masses of scarlet, nestled against their rank, green leaves, as if some enchanted hand had hung all the forest aisles with glittering pendants of amethyst.

"The jelly they would make!" pondered Phyllis, shading her large black eyes with one hand. "And the preserves. I really do think that when Hester took the cottage, we ought to have had the privilege of these woods into the bargain, more especially as Sir Edgar Leigh is abroad, and the fruit is doing nobody any good."

And pretty, wilful Phyllis drew a deep sigh, as the wind wafted a fresh gust of fragrance toward her—the sweet, indescribable aroma of ripening grapes in the crucible of sunshine.

She was a pleasant picture to gaze upon, fair as a lily, yet with laughing, sloe-black eyes, long-lashed and almond-shaped, a saucy, retrousse nose, and lips like a cleft rosebud. And as she stood there, with her dimpled hands interlaced above her eyes, a rebellious resolution formed itself in her heart.

"I will have them," she exclaimed with a determined air, "as well as the schoolboys and the sparrows. And if I were to ask that crusty old agent, I know he'd refuse, so I shall just omit the little ceremony."

And Phyllis went home to the little cottage on the edge of the wood, which had once been a porter's lodge to the Leigh estate, and told her sister what she had determined upon.

"Phyllis," said Hester Grant, who was ten years older than her sister, and a good many degrees graver, "pray don't think of such a thing."

"Why not?" said her sister.

"It would be stealing."

"No, it wouldn't," sturdily argued Phyllis. "There they grow, going nobody any good; and it's a ridiculous shame! And Sir Edgar is in Paris, and that cross old crab of an agent sets up a cry, if one does but to pick a sprig of leaves. So, Hester, there's no use arguing; the strawberries I want, and the strawberries I'll have!"

"I wouldn't," said Miss Grant.

"I would," said Phyllis.

And she took down a little wicker basket, with a twisted handle and a double lid, and tripped off.

"How are you going to get at them," said Hester.

"I shall climb over the hedge," said Phyllis,

"You?" cried Miss Grant.

"Yes, I!"

Whilst she was engaged gathering the scarlet spoils that grew ripe and tempting within her reach, there was a crackling of dry leaves under foot, and a tall young man, in a suit of dark-colored cloth and a Tyrolese hat, stepped lightly into the forest glade.

"It's the new curate," said Phyllis to herself. "To think that he should have blundered along at this very time of all others! But I may as well make the best of it."

And she turned round to greet the bewildered newcomer with a sweet smile and the utmost self-possession.

"Will you have some strawberries?" said she, holding out the twisted wicker basket.

"I—I beg your pardon!" stammered the stranger; "but I must have mistaken my way. I supposed these were the Leigh woods."

"So they are," said Phyllis; "and I am stealing the strawberries—because, you see, we—my sister and myself—have rented the little cottage yonder, and I really think the strawberries ought to go with the cottage—don't you?"

"Really," said the stranger—Phyllis had perceived by this time that he was tall and straight, with pleasant hazel eyes, and a long, silky moustache—"I know so little about the property here—"

"Oh, of course not," said Phyllis, sitting down on a fallen tree, with her little apron full of ripe fruit. "But I can tell you. Sir Edgar Leigh, is such a cross old fudge that one can't ask for so much as a bunch of wild flowers—a regular crab, you know!" opening her bright eyes very wide, to emphasize the idea.

"How very disagreeable," said the stranger, who had taken a seat on the mossy log, beside Phyllis, and was eating strawberries as if it were the most natural thing in the world.

"So I just made up my mind to help myself," said Phyllis.

"So I perceive," said the hero of the silky moustache.

"Wouldn't you, if you were in my place?" said Phyllis.

"Certainly I would," said the gentleman, "and, if you will allow me, I will help you to help yourself."

"But you haven't time," objected Phyllis, dubiously.

"Oh, yes, I have," said the stranger, "plenty of time, I assure you. I was only crossing the woods to call on the new curate, and——"

The basket slid to the ground, as Phyllis started up in amazement and dismay.

"Oh, dear," cried she. "I thought you were the new curate.

The stranger laughed.

"Do I look so very clerical?" said he.

"Then you are the agent's son from London?" she said. "Oh, dear! oh, dear! And I've been calling your father a crab, and all sorts of names. Oh, dear! I beg your pardon, I am sure, but all the same he is a crab!"

"Pray don't distress yourself," soothed the stranger. "I am no relation at all to Sir Edgar's agent."

Phyllis brightened up a little at this.

"I'm thankful for that," said she. "And now, if you'll help me with the strawberries, we can get them all gathered before the agent comes this way on his afternoon walk. Can you pick them?"

"I should rather think I could," promptly answered the gentleman.

Phyllis clapped her pinny little hands in delight, as the huge bunches rained into her apron.

"There," cried she, "that's enough!"

"Are you quite sure?"

"Oh, quite," answered Phyllis; "for jelly and preserves, and to send a lot to market to buy my new bonnet-ribbons."

"Then it's all right," said the stranger. "And we've out-witted Sir Edgar Leigh and his crusty old agent after all."

"Haven't we?" said Phyllis, with her black eyes dancing with mischief. "And now, if you'll come home with me, I'll give you a cup of tea and a slice of home-made cake."

"I shall be very happy to carry your basket for you," said the stranger, courteously.

"There he is now," said Phyllis, recoiling a little, as they neared the tiny cottage, with its drooping eaves and vine-covered porch.

"Who?" asked the gentleman.

"The agent."

"He can't hurt us," said the stranger.

And he walked boldly into the very presence of Mr. Macpherson, with the basket of plundered strawberries on his arm; while Phyllis followed, much marvelling at his valor.

But, instead of bursting out into invective, the agent sprang to his feet, and began bowing and scraping obsequiously.

"Really, Sir Edgar," said he, "this is a pleasure that I didn't expect."

"Sir Edgar!" stammered Phyllis, in affright.

"I beg a thousand pardons for not disclosing my identity before," said the handsome "incognito." "But you've no idea how I have enjoyed this little masquerade. Will you allow me to introduce myself formally at last?"

Phyllis turned crimson and pale.

"But I've been stealing your strawberries!" said she.

"Every fruit or flower on my estate is at your service," said the young heir, with a bow and a smile.

But, when he went away, Hester took her younger sister formally to task.

"Phyllis," said she, "aren't you ashamed?"

"Not a bit," said Phyllis, valiantly.

"Stealing fruit like a schoolboy, and romping like a child," remonstrated Hester.

"If Sir Edgar don't mind it," said Phyllis, "why should I? And we're going to the Haunted Spring to-morrow, and I shall show him the Rocky Glen. Oh, I can tell you, Hester, it's great fun!"

But, as time crept on, Miss Grant grew more uneasy still.

"Phyllis," said she, "you must leave off flirting with Sir Edgar Leigh."

"Why?" asked Phyllis.

"Because you are poor, and he is rich; and people are beginning to talk."

"Let 'em talk," said Phyllis. "We are to be married next month, and then we can set the whole world at defiance, and Hester—" hiding her face on the elder sister's shoulder.

"Well?"

"He says he fell in love with me that day he caught me stealing his strawberries."

The Prince of Wales' Cab.

The Prince of Wales, says the London World, has taken very much of late to a private hansom. He attended the last Sandown meeting in it both days; and while the Prince deserves credit, I think, for adopting a mode of conveyance so sensible and unostentatious, the cab itself is worthy of notice, for it is an embodiment of comfort and good taste. By a simple application of the lever principle the driver from his seat behind can shut and open the doors as required. In addition to large side-windows, two large windows in the back of the cab permit the occupant to cast a Parthian glance behind when need be; and a traveling clock, with a luminous dial-face in the center of the splash-board, prevents the necessity of unbuttoning the greatcoat to have recourse to a watch. I only hope his royal highness will pick up Sir Edmund Henderson one day, and show him what cabs might and should be. The Prince's cab is by no means expensive, and is strongly built, though light and handsome.

A Tip-Top Hotel.

The following notice is posted up in the hall of the "Desert House" hotel, Green River City, Wyoming Territory: —"This hotel has been built and arranged for the special comfort and convenience of summer boarders. On arrival, each guest will be asked how he likes the situation; and, if he says the hotel ought to have been placed up upon the knoll or further down towards the village, the location of the house will be immediately changed. Corner front rooms, up only one flight, for every guest. Baths, gas, hot and cold water, laundry, telegraph, restaurant, fire-alarm, bar-room, billiard-table, daily papers, cuisine, sewing-machine, grand piano, and all other modern conveniences in every room. Meals every minute, if desired, and consequently no second table. English, French, and German dictionaries furnished every guest, to make up such a bill of fare as he may desire, without regard to the bill-affair afterwards at the office. Waiters of any nationality and color desired. Every waiter furnished with a libretto, button-hole bouquet, full-dress suits, ball-tickets, and his hair parted in the middle. Every guest will have the best seat in the dining-hall and the best waiter in the house. Any guest not getting his breakfast red-hot, or experiencing a delay of sixteen seconds after giving his order for dinner, will please mention the fact at the office, and the cooks and waiters will be blown from the mouth of the cannon in front of the hotel at once. Children will be welcomed with delight, and are requested to bring hoop-sticks and saw-keys to hang the carved rosewood furniture especially provided for that purpose, and pegtops to spin on the velvet carpets; they will be allowed to bang on the piano at all hours, yell in the halls, slide down the bannisters, fall down stairs, carry away dessert enough for a small family in their pockets at dinner, and make themselves as disagreeable as the fondest mother can desire. Washing allowed in rooms, and ladies giving an order to 'Put me on a flat iron' will be put on one at any hour of the day or night. A discreet waiter, who belongs to the Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, and who was never known to oven tell the time of day, has been employed to carry milk-punches and hot toddies to ladies' rooms in the evening. Every lady will be considered the belle of the house. The office-clerk has been carefully selected to please every body, and can play draw-poker, match worsted at the village store, shake for the drinks at any hour, day or night, play billiards, good waltzer, and can dance the German, make a fourth at euchre, amuse children, is a good judge of horses, as railway and steamboat reference is far superior to Appleton's or anybody else's guide, will flirt with any young lady, and not mind being cut dead when 'pa comes down,' can room forty people in the best room in the house when the hotel is full, attend to the annunciator, and answer questions in Hebrew, Greek, Chinese, Irish, or any other polite language at the same moment without turning a hair. Dogs allowed in any room in the house, including the writing-room. The proprietor will always be happy to hear that some other hotel is 'the best house in the country.' Special attention given to parties who can give information as to whereabouts of things and men in Vermont. The tiny cupboard with the disinterested skeleton in it will be found in the dining-room, and not in all sitting-rooms, as in other hotels. Guests will please not throw the bones on the floor, as the landlord is trying to make a pet of the skeleton, and has a mild affection for it. Front rooms, with a good view of the mountains, at the moment of their arrival, will be made to order, at the moment of their departure, by the application of a file and an engine and tender. Hot and cold spring approaches will be immediately received, but no visitors will be received but such as can be introduced by a card. Any guest who is caught talking politics in the reading-room will be immediately removed, and his name published in the local papers as a defaulter. Any guest who is caught talking politics in the billiard-room will be immediately removed, and his name published in the local papers as a defaulter.
