

CLOUD CHIEF.

WEDNESDAY JAN. 20, 1875.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF GOVERNOR SILAS GARBER.

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives: I have taken the oath prescribed by the constitution...

Legislation should be shaped to the wants of the people, and coming directly from them you are acquainted with their wishes...

The first of these is economy. This commonwealth is in its infancy; her resources as yet undeveloped...

In a representative government where all power is delegated, it is the province of legislation to meet the simple necessities and requirements of society...

The lessons of history teach that the greatest reforms consist not in doing something new, but in undoing something old...

The state government should be administered with the same judicious economy that a prudent business man exercises in the management of his private affairs...

I have had no opportunity to acquire detailed official information concerning the particular necessities of the state; but happily, the exhaustive message of my predecessor, embracing the substance of the several reports of the departments, contains much valuable information...

All new states must depend mainly upon immigration to occupy their lands, and develop their resources.

It is gratifying to know that through the policy of the general government in reserving for actual settlers lands not otherwise appropriated, and through the organized and efficient measures of the different Railroad Companies...

Finally, impressed with a sense of dependence upon the Supreme Ruler and Creator of all things, and mindful of our responsibilities, let us dedicate ourselves to the work of executing faithfully the important public trust committed to us by the partiality of a confiding constituency.

As three teams, accompanied by four men, were crossing the river opposite this city yesterday at about noon, coming toward Omaha, the ice gave way and they all sank beneath the ice and were seen no more.

Last Monday afternoon while a party of prisoners were engaged cutting stone in the prison enclosure, eight of the most daring of them, headed by the notorious McWaters, made a bold attempt to escape.

The publication of this in your paper may bring it to the notice of persons who will recognize the propriety by the description and thus assist in tracing up a matter which appears very mysterious and serious.

The following appears in the North Platte Nebraskan under date of Ogallala Dec. 23. The discovery of a deserted camp on the head of Stinking Water, twenty-five miles south east of there, with very peculiar surroundings, is reported by G. H. Miller.

He states that about a week ago he, with George Beecher and James Lamb came upon this camp, where they found an A tent, a Sharps' carbine, three blankets, a bride, a wooden bucket and a baking oven; also a dead horse with a lariat and picket pin attached; having apparently been picketed there until he starved to death.

Past experience has demonstrated the danger of pressing upon the public so important a measure as a constitution without sufficient time to read and understand it.

Many of our sister states have received valuable information through the employment of a geologist, whose duty it is to visit different sections of the state and make and report geological investigations.

The condition of the western portion of the state will merit your careful and critical attention. Much has already been done by private charity to relieve the wants of the destitute in this section.

I trust, therefore, that you will take such action as your judgment shall seem prudent for the relief of such of our fellow citizens as have not already been reached, or provided for, by private charity, remembering however that no assistance will be equal to the emergency, that does not provide need for those that cannot otherwise obtain it, to the end that, in the future, they may become self-sustaining.

In conclusion, gentlemen of the joint convention, it will be my greatest pleasure to co-operate with you in all things pertaining to the welfare of the state.

It is just that we cannot escape the record which we ourselves shall make. It is a favorable omen that the public mind is more active and the public conscience more sensitive than ever before in the history of the state.

We have now within our borders, the population and natural resources sufficient to establish a state in fact, as well as in name.

This result will be best achieved by guarding the public credit as a sacred trust.

Finally, impressed with a sense of dependence upon the Supreme Ruler and Creator of all things, and mindful of our responsibilities, let us dedicate ourselves to the work of executing faithfully the important public trust committed to us by the partiality of a confiding constituency.

Gov. Garber was presented with a cane a few days ago by a few gentlemen of Lincoln.

The Editorial Association will hold a meeting at Lincoln, Jan. 21st. The State Board of Agriculture meets on the same day.

A change has taken place in the editorial management of the Hastings Journal. A. L. Wigton, the founder, and more recently the owner of one-half of the establishment, has disposed of his interest to his former partner, B. A. Dague.

The daily Kearney Press made its appearance last week in a "new dress" of brevity, adding very materially to its already fine appearance.

Red Cloud, Neb.

A Representative and Champion of American Art Taste! THE ALDINE.

THE ALDINE, while issued with all the regularity, has none of the temporary or fad-like interest characteristic of ordinary periodicals. It is an elegant miscellany of pure, light, and graceful literature; and a collection of pictures, the rarest specimens of artistic skill, in black and white.

THE NATIONAL FEATURE OF THE ALDINE. The national feature of THE ALDINE must be taken in no narrow sense. True art is cosmopolitan. While THE ALDINE is an entirely American institution, it does not confine itself entirely to the reproduction of native art.

THE ARTIST ILLUSTRATION OF AMERICAN SCENERY. The artistic illustration of American scenery, original with THE ALDINE, is an important feature, and its magnitude and variety of treatment is a source of satisfaction to the artist and a pleasure to the public.
