

EDLWEISS.
What is the sweet little flower
In all the leaf green wild?
O that must be the violet—
The spring's own foster child.
O no, not here the sweetest dower,
I know a fairer little flower:
What is the sweetest little flower
In all the leaf green wild?
Then it must be the red, red rose.
On which the sunbeam smiled.
O no, not here the fairest dower,
I know a fairer little flower.
The rose and violet fade and die
And the leaf green wild;
I know a dower that never fades
In silent solitude.
Then name to me this forest child,
The sweetest flower of all the wild.
When gentle spring the violet wakes,
And wood birds sing and brood,
Then waits my wondrous little flower
In patient solitude.
No breath of perfume hour by hour—
Yet still the sweetest little flower.
When all the flowers go to sleep,
When leaf and blossom fall:
When shrub and tree all mourning stand,
And birds no longer call,
From ice and snow then blooms to light
My little flower so silver white.
Of love within the heart that glows
"Undying, even now."
This flower that from the silence grows,
In semblance fair and true,
Free from its thralldom of snow and ice,
Dear little flower—Edelweiss.

A Corpse in the Air.
The Paris correspondent of the Philadelphia Press writes: "One of the strangest and most horrible of sensational incidents took place the other day at Puteaux. A party of children who were playing in the environs discovered floating in the air, and partly entangled amid the branches of a tree, a white parcel, upon which were some twenty or thirty little red toy balloons, which were attached to it. The attention of the police being called to this singular object, it was brought down and the package opened, which proved to contain the corpse of a new-born infant. Investigations into the matter brought to light the following facts: The child was that of a poor toy-maker and his wife. Just after the confinement of the latter the husband had died suddenly, and all the household goods and chattels had been seized for rent. The unhappy woman was driven mad by this accumulation of misfortunes; she killed her infant, and then went out and threw herself into the river, leaving behind her a written paper, in which she declared her intention of committing suicide, and said that she 'had gotten her baby all ready to go to heaven.' A sad tale, with a stranger termination, it would be hard to find. The toy balloons evidently had formed part of the dead husband's stock in trade."

A Clergyman's Story.
"In the year 1800," said the Rev. Dr. Dowling, last evening, "four small Baptist Churches were leading a precarious existence in New York State." Of that in this city, John Ganot was pastor, and Elder Leland was preaching over a congregation in Cheshire. The latter, honored with the title of "hard-shelled," deserves a position at the head of the priesthood. Just after the election of Thomas Jefferson to the Presidency, in 1801, the Elder, impressed with the propriety of an expression of loyalty by the entire Baptist denomination issued a proclamation that all men, "holy and good," of that faith, should contribute material for the manufacture of a "mammoth cheese," to be given to the newly elected President. The result was a cheese weighing 1,450 pounds, which the Elder placed on his wagon and started for Washington. People flocked from all the country adjoining the towns through which the saintly man passed. As he expressed it, "I preached all the way to the Capital and back again." Conversions were made along the route of the pastor and his cheese, and a great revival sprang up in the Baptist Churches throughout the land. Mr. Dowling attributes the prosperity of the church to the eccentric Elder and his gigantic cheese.—From the New York Sun.

Billings' Resolutions for 1876.
That I won't borrow or lend, especially lend.
That I won't advise anybody until I know what kind of advice they are anxious to follow.
That I won't wear any more tite boots if I had to go barefoot to do it.
That I won't swap dogs with no man unless I can swap two dogs for one.
That poverty may be a blessing, but if it is, it is a blessing in disguise.
That the world owes me a living—permitted I earn it.
That no man shall beat me in politeness nor as long as politeness continues to be as cheap as it is now.
That if a man calls me a phool I won't ask him to prove it.
That I will lead a moral life, even if I go lonesome and lose a good deal of fun by it.
That if a man tells me a mule won't kick, I will believe what he says without trying it.
That the best time to repent of a blunder is just before the blunder is made.
That when I hear a man bragging on his ancestors I won't envy him, but will pity the ancestors.

Peter Campbell, of St. George, N. B., who claims the Scottish title of Marquis of Breddalbane, has placed his case in the hands of three law firms in England and Scotland. He feels confident of success, and as the estates are worth $600,000 a year they are worth trying for. At the same time the names of the claimants to this peerage who have appeared since the death of the old Marquis in 1837 have been legion.

The Samoan Islands.
Something Definite About the Kingdom of Steinberger.
One of the most interesting groups of the South Sea has received scant justice from recent visitors, who seem content, for the most part, to chronicle Steinberger's farcical performances. A Prussian surgeon, however, Dr. Ernst Bohr, attached to a frigate now cruising in the Pacific, has studied the Samoans to better purpose.

In an exact and literal sense, these islands realize the dream of the Hesperides, combining all the natural conditions of serene, voluptuous existence untroubled by the necessity of labor, untroubled by peril of any kind. In such circumstances our northern mariners lose their significance, for fruit and fish being always at hand, there is no impediment in living from hand to mouth. It appears that the weather, too, is a subject of indifference, since there is no season of the year when a loose palm thatch and a few hanging mats will not afford ample protection. No fever is exhaled from the dense foliage, nor do any venomous snakes find a covert in the luxuriant undergrowth. On the Samoans, as on most of the South Sea Islands, no species of quadruped has ever been discovered, the few domestic animals now owned by the natives, being descended from imported stock. Even sea fowl, which are so common further south, are here rare.

On the other hand, the Samoan woods abound in singing birds and gay colored parrots of divers sorts. When we add that the forests largely consist of the cocoa palm, while the river and bays are full of edible fish, it will be observed that these fortunate isles exhibit all the kindlier features, without any of the drawbacks, of the tropics. Dr. Bohr considered the natives of the Samoans the handsomest race he had ever seen. In figure they are tall, slender, and usually of perfect symmetry. The men possess a powerful muscular development, and the younger women have exquisitely rounded forms. Their complexion is a pleasing cinnamon brown, not darker than the skin of European gypsies. The face is open and nobly shaped, the eye black, large, and mild, the lips somewhat sensual but only slightly protruding, while the black hair flows over the shoulders in abundant curls. Dr. Bohr is not surprised that many anthropologists should account the inhabitants of the Tonga, Samoa, and Tahiti groups related to the equally brown Hindoos, and so to the Circassian race, since as respects beauty they appear inferior to no variety of that vaunted type.

A peaceful disposition seems to have preserved the Samoans from the atrocity of cannibalism practiced by their neighbors of Papuan stock. Of foreign wars they seem to have no record, and civil dissension is infrequent and never destructive. Before the appearance of the whites crime was literally unknown, and even the passion for tobacco and strong drink, and the consequent coveting of money, have impelled this peculiarly gentle race rather to deceit and roguery than to deeds of violence. The white race, which, by every method of corruption, had undermined the morals of Samoan women, is now attempting, through its missionaries, to inculcate more exemplary principles; but so far the main result of their labors has been to divert the natives of their native simplicity. Polygamy, however, has long been abolished. Marriage is studiously encouraged by the laws, and even the morganatic unions contracted with the whites are subject to strict regulations.

Although the Samoans are, in most respects, a thoroughly civilized race, they retain some primitive characteristics. The normal garment of both sexes is a broad strip of native stuff, dyed with the most gaudy hues, which is wound about the loins and fastened with a scarf of the same material. Upon the urgent remonstrance of the missionaries, this costume is sometimes supplemented by the younger females with a circular cape, having an aperture for the head. The men continue to tattoo their bodies above the waist in a quaint checker work pattern, whose effect is not disagreeable. Like the Venetians of Titian's day, the Samoans count it an embellishment to stain their black locks red. Their dances, to which they are greatly addicted, are described as zuzgenia, being as unlike those of the Hindoo bayadere or Spanish gitana as to a European quadrille. They resemble a ballet, action and mimicry being no less essential than graceful motion. The Samoans have a pleasing voice, and their singing is melodious. The language appears to be soft and liquid; but as to its structure, Dr. Bohr is not explicit. He says it comprises only seven consonant characters, but as he adds that it is syllabic, the two statements are hard to reconcile. Like the Chinese and most races of Polynesia, the Samoans are unable to articulate the R sound. Of Samoan history, this traveler could find no records, and he does not seem to have attempted to collect traditions. Neither does he venture to estimate the number of inhabitants; but as a single village adjoining the European settlement of Apia contained two thousand, while several others quite as large could be found in the immediate neighborhood, the aggregate population must be considerable.

The chief port of the Samoans is Apia, and the harbor, though small, is nearly land-locked, and one of the safest in the South Sea. Here is centered all the foreign and coasting trade of the adjoining islands, which is mainly controlled by Hamburg merchants. Their business has attained a magnitude fully equal to the initial efforts of the Dutch East India Company. Every year a large fleet of ships replenishes their warehouses with European products, and these are distributed by smaller craft throughout a circuit of many hundred miles. For the homeward voyage, ships are freighted with kopra, or dried meat of the coconut, which is extensively used in Germany for the manufacture of oil and soap. To meet the growing demand for this material, the German company has undertaken plantations on a great scale. As the Samoans can not be induced to work, it has been found necessary to import laborers of a more hardy and savage stock from distant islands, who, on their arrival at Apia, are subjected to a kind of peonage. The development of this system must prove prejudicial to the free inhabitants of the Samoans, but the Hamburg merchants are practically masters of the islands. It is true they tolerate the semblance of a Government, intrusted to seven chiefs with provincial subordinate named consuls, but German influence based on the absolute control of imports is so decisive and irresistible that the attempt of Steinberger, or of any other foreign adventurer, to thwart their interests would result in his summary expulsion from the islands.

Unparalleled Sufferings.
A Wrecked Ship's Crew Making the Liver of a Corpse One of the Number Dies of a Broken Heart.
The survivors of the crew of the ship Great Britain, who recently reached Liverpool, tell a terrible story of suffering. The vessel was bound from Dolry, N. S., for Liverpool. She sailed on the 11th of February, laden with a cargo of pitch pine timber. The weather was fine, and continued so up to the 16th of the month, when she was overtaken by a terrific gale, which continued, with scarcely any intermission for days. On Friday morning, the 21st ult., when in longitude 24 west, and latitude 48 30 north, or about 600 miles from the Irish coast, the vessel was struck by a tremendous storm. She had before this shown symptoms of becoming water-logged, and on the day previously the Captain had put all hands to the pumps, and she was to a great extent freed; but this did not avail, and before the masts could be cut away, she capsized. The Captain had previously ordered the men aft on the poop, so that in the event of disaster occurring they could escape into the mizen rigging, and fourteen of them managed to do so, but the Captain and the remainder were thrown into the sea. The Captain, after a severe battle with the elements, was a fortunate enough to reach the rigging, and the fifteen remained in that position nearly an hour, when the mainmast and the mizenmast giving away, the hull righted itself. Those who had escaped drowning clambered upon about twenty feet of the poop deck which was left, and there they were doomed to remain for over eight days. The Captain, upon perceiving the chance of the vessel being water-logged, thoughtfully directed that a quantity of provisions should be stored in the booby-hatch, and this was being done when the ship capsized. The second mate, Absalom Chilcott, and the steward, James Barbour, were indeed down in the cabin at the time for the purpose of bringing up an additional quantity of bread, and were never seen afterwards. The provisions which had been stored in the hatch were thrown into the sea by the upsetting of the vessel, and neither water and covered with every wave, they were thus left in mid ocean incapable of attempting escape beyond the hoisting of a piece of sail upon a spar, with the chance of attracting the notice of any passing craft.

BATING THE LIVER OF A CORPSE.
They were reduced by hunger and starvation to such a pitch that they were at length compelled to drink each other's refuse, and when the cook died, on the seventh day, he was cut open, his liver taken out and divided. One of the ordinary seamen next succumbed; and on the evening before the rescue of those who survived, the Captain's son, Robert, and a young man, Wickoff, died. The Captain had alternately hugged the two boys to his breast to preserve them from the piercing cold, and his own son died while in his father's arms.

DIED OF A BROKEN HEART.
Shortly before the cook died a steamer, with black funnel and outworks, black rigging and not over large—it is believed she can be identified—passed within a comparatively short distance, and was hailed, but she took no notice, and proceeded on her voyage. Up to this time the cook had maintained a hearty spirit and was the most cheerful of the desolate party, but he afterward drooped, and the Captain thinks, died of a broken heart, induced by the presumed heartless conduct of those on the steamer. A bark was also sighted, but she was at too great a distance from the wreck to distinguish it or the signals displayed. At last the ship Greta came upon the wreck, and with great difficulty and much gallantry, took off the surviving eight.—N. Y. Mercury.

A woman's heart is just like a lithographer's stone—what is once written upon it can not be rubbed out.—Thackeray.
If wisdom were conferred with this proviso, that I must keep it to myself and not communicate it to others, I would have none of it.—Seneca.
Poor wine at the table of a rich host is an insult without an apology. Urbanity ushers in water that needs no apology, and gives a zest to the worst vintage.—Zimmerman.
As the most fermenting in a vessel works up to the top whatever it has in the bottom, so wine, in those who have drunk beyond the measure, vents the most inward secrets.—Montaigne.
Gross and vulgar minds will always pay a higher respect to wealth than to talent; for wealth, although it is a less efficient source of power than talent, happens to be far more intelligible.—Colton.
Some intermixtures of vain-glorious tempers put life into business, and make a fit composition in grand enterprises and hazardous undertakings. For men of solid and sober natures have more of the ballast than the sail.—Bacon.
The love of glory, the fear of shame, the design of making a fortune, the desire of rendering life easy and agreeable, and the humor of pulling down other people, are often the causes of that valor so celebrated among men.—Rochefoucauld.

What a fine looking thing is war! Yet, dress it as we will, dress and feather it, dawl it with gold, huzzas it, and sing swaggering songs about it—what is it, nine times out of ten, but murder in uniform.—[Douglas Jerrold.]
It is necessary to make war with five things, with the malades of the body, the ignorance of the mind, with the passions of the body, with the seditions of the city, and the discords of families.—[Pythagoras.]
Virtue is shut out from no one; he is open to all, accepts all, invites all gentlemen, freedmen, slaves, kings, and exiles; she selects neither house nor fortune; she is satisfied with a human being without adjuncts.—[Seneca.]
A weakness natural to superior and to little men, when they have committed a fault, is to wish to make it pass as a work of genius, a vast combination which the vulgar can not comprehend. Pride says these things and folly credits them.—[Chateaubriand.]
Twilight hour! whose mantle is the drapery of dreams, and who has ever been in poetry life's holy time; those who went want to steal upon us, as they sandals were of dew! how sadly comes the rustle of thy step, in the decaying seasons of the year.—[Willis.]
Peregrination charms our senses with such unpeppable and sweet variety, that some count him unhappy that never traveled—a kind of prisoner, and pity his case; that, from his cradle to his old age, he beholds the same still, still, still, the same, the same.—[Burton.]
In the use of the tongue Goth distinguished us from beasts, and by the well or ill using it we are distinguished from one another; and therefore, though silence be innocent as death, harmless as a rose's breath to a distant passenger, yet it is the jeremy of death that death of life.—[Jeremy Taylor.]

The foolish man built his house upon the sands, and the rains came, and the floods washed it away. Another foolish man bought a new harness and continued to use it without currying or cleaning it, until it became hard and brittle, and one day, when in the midst of harvest, the harness broke and he was compelled to drive to town and lose half a day or more in having it repaired. Had he taken good care of his harness by using Uncle Sam's Harness Oil when occasion required, he would have avoided the loss of time and temper, and been greatly the gainer in both comfort and money, and his harness would have lasted much longer. Earnest Proprietary Co., Chicago, Ill., manufacturers. For sale by harness makers, druggists and dealers.
Level Root.
We are sure it pays to do your "level root" at all times, as whatever is worth doing is all worth doing well; as an illustration, the manufacturer of a catalogue of the Domestic Paper Patterns that can be produced, and the result in the Chicago Oak has attained a popularity unprecedented in the history of Europe.

Nothing is more sensitive than the urinary organs; they are the filters of the body, and if they are clogged the work stops. Dr. Green's King's Cure acts on the bladder and kidneys, cleanses the blood and the matter, prevents acid urine, gravel and uric acid diseases.

Central Tonic Caps.
Scientific investigation combined with low price, has enabled the manufacturers of the Central Dry Good Store to offer to the public a year that stands unrivaled in every particular. The rapidly with which it is superseding all other years is the very best evidence that can be offered of its popularity. It is in full wrapper, and every package is guaranteed to give satisfaction.
