But he went to work on his farm again, Planted his corn and sowed his grain, Repaired the house and broken fence, And people said he had "common sense."

Now common sense was rather rare, And the State House needed a portion there; So our "family dunce" moved into town, and people called him "Governor Brown." Came home to live with mother's fool

When I began to like Rose Budd so much I seriously thought of proposings petence. I had increased it by speculato her. Hiram Roper liked her too. He was five years older than I; a plain man of twenty-nine, with faint scars on his face and a bald spot on the middle of his head. A poor man, studying medicine late in life, because he had not been able to study in his youth, only hoping for his diploma in a year, with the practice all in the future; and I, at twenty-four, had the Mosswood estate for my own, and money enough to live on comfortably. There could be no comparison between us, I fondly hoped, that would not be favorable to me, and I coolly, though politely, took my place before him, and cut him out on all occasions with Rosebud. I, young and rich jilted me, and also that my money was and handsome, and, as I supposed, elegantly dressed; he, plain, poor and shabby, looking ten years older than he really was. What chance had he against me?

And so he slipped quietly into the background and 1 made love to Rosebud, and one day kissed her on the cheek, and told her life would not be worth having to me if I could not win her; and she said nothing, but outblushed all the roses, and let me kiss vet I knew she would be prettier than her again. After that we walked boldly arm-in-arm through the village, and friends teased me, and the other beaux I would make amends. And Farmer Budd with his uncouth pain, an awakening in a little room, straggling beard and hair, was not the sort of father-in-law that I should admire; and there was Miss Hannover. come to London with a moderate comtion until I was absolutely wealthy. Now I found myself almost poor. There remained to me only the Mosswood property, which must be turned into a farm, and I myself must leave my hope of being one of the city millionaires behind me, and become a plain farmer-a man of the same social status as Rosebud's father, without his comfortable knowledge of money in the bank to comfort me.

However, with the bursting of the bubble fortune, the circle which had gathered about Hannover had been seemingly scatter to the winds, and people knew - Miss Violette had gone. The city had lost many of its charms, and I wrote to the old woman who had kept the house at Mosswood for my father until his death, to make it ready for my return. Then selling the furniture of my bachelor rooms, and packing my smaller belongings in a few trunks, I started homeward. I must go back to Mosswood and become a farmer. die. And certainly we hardly need anything more especial to demonstrate our descent from the man who hid himself behind a scantier fig leaf than the fig-tree bears when he declared, in the face of his accuser, "The woman gave me, and I did eat," for it is the first excuse that rises to the lips of most of Adam's sons to-day. Moses, if he had not had greater messages to bear, would have needed, for that one masterful stroke in masculine delineation, no further inspiration than that given by his own observation and his acquired knowledge of human nature, which taught him that the not-unsuual man will never fail to shelter himself behind the object that there is, for shame's sake, tacit compact to leave unstruck, and belongs to some corps like that old army which went into battle with its children and its gods in front, on which no gallant enemy liked to open fight.
