THE NEBRASKA SUMMER SCHOOL OF SCIENCE.

OBJECT: The object is to furnish instruction in Natural Science; and by means of a moving camp to gain the practical knowledge only to be obtained from field work.

ORGANIZATION: The organization is under the auspices of the Governor, State Officers, and a number of the leading men of the state.

INSTRUCTION: Instruction will be given by lectures every day when the school is in camp, which will be illustrated by the specimens collected, and by apparatus furnished by the teachers.

MEMBERSHIP: No examination will be held for entrance; the only requirements being good moral character and desire to gain information.

Character of the Route: The region over which the route extends is diversified by alternations of valleys, bottoms, rolling and bluffs, and near the western portion, by occasional sand hills.

Scientific Nature of the Route: The geology of the district comprises the Cretaceous and Tertiary formations with some of the most characteristic sub-divisions.

For one hundred miles of the route the Loess deposits are the characteristic soils of the surface. Where these have been removed by denudation the Drift is exposed in the same sections.

In exceedingly interesting. The line of travel passes over the border line between the Floras of the Central and Western Plains, and contains characteristic forms belonging to both sections.

One of the members of the expedition expects to be furnished with a good microscope.

General Information: Rendezvous. The school will meet at Red Cloud on the first day of July, 1878.

Outfit: The outfit for each person should consist of one extra suit of clothing, two changes of under-clothing, towels, soap, brushes, needles and thread.

Specimens: Every facility possible will be given students to collect and send away specimens; but it will be expected that all will box up and send away collections at all available points.

Expenses: A tuition fee of thirty dollars ($30) will be charged to all students. The expenses of transportation and board will be divided pro rata among all members of the school.
