The clock had just struck nine—
I sot inside the farm-house,
With Polly Angeline.
The folks was all a sleepin'—
I heard her snorin' sire—
While she and I was keepin'
A wake around the fire— Awake around the fire-Awake around the fire, While up the chimbley leapin' The sparks flew higher an' higher.

Now she was just the sweetest O' all the gais I knew; And, while I sot aside her, The minutes more 'n flew. At last tu me sez Polly. 'Ef we stay here till morn

To pop a leetle corn.
Sez I, "You're right, I golly,
Ez sure ez you were born!"

I knew that she was willin': I thought I jest would melt; I'd gin a bran new shillin' Tu told her how I felt. The corn was soon a poppin'
An' she was talkin' gay;
My boart it kep a poppin'.
But nothin' could I say;
But nothin' could I say;

The corn it kep a-droppin' I wished I was away. At last she took the popper An' laid it on the floor; An', redder n' any copper, She went and shet the door;

An' then, a moment stoppin', She came a lectic nigher, An' whispered, "Du the poppin An' I will tend yer fire— An' I will tend yer fire." I felt my heart a-floppin', But I was bound tu try her.
