

How Disraeli Would Have Had London.

One of Disraeli's favorite ideas was that London ought to be made the most magnificent city in the world—a real Kaiserstadt or imperial town, a model to all other cities in the character of its public buildings, the sanitary perfection and outer picturesqueness of its private houses, the width of its streets, etc. When Napoleon III commenced the re-edification of Paris he used to say: "Is it not pitiful that the Emperor should be doing by force what we could do so much better of our own free will if we had a proper pride, to say nothing of good sense, in the matter?" He found many congenial listeners, and one in particular, Mr. Baillie Lushington, now Lord Lushington (the Baillie, now "Coringby"), whose artistic tastes are well known. But he was generally met by some such theories as satisfied the Aylesbury tradesman, or by talk about that eternal want of peace which vexes public men. Once when he was staying at Knole he launched out into a parody of Macaulay's idea of the New Zealander meditating over the ruins of London Bridge. He imagined this personage reconstructing a row of villas at Brixton: "What a picture he would make of it; he would naturally suppose that knowing how to build, and having just awoken to a knowledge of sanitation, we had built according to the best ideas in our heads." Then he took his New Zealander among the ruins of the stately commercial palaces crowded in narrow lanes all round the Bank and the Exchange: "He would conclude that there must after all have been some tyrannical laws which prevented our merchants from combining their resources to make their streets spacious and effective, for it would seem absurd to him that intelligent men should, at a great cost, have built palaces for themselves in holes and corners where nobody could admire them properly, when, by acting in concert, they might at much less expense have set much finer palaces in noble avenues, courts and squares." Then Disraeli broke out into an animated description of his regenerate London, with Wren's four grand approaches to St. Paul's, boulevards transecting the metropolis in all directions, and the palace of Whitehall rebuilt after Inigo Jones' designs to make new Government offices. He would have covered the embankment pedestals with statues of Admirals set in colossal groups recalling great naval achievements, and he thought Stepney ought to have its cathedral of St. Peter—the church of a sea-faring nation, dedicated to the fisherman saint—and containing memorials to all the humble heroes, sailors or fishermen, who lost their lives performing acts of courage on the water. "The names of such men ought not to perish," he used to say. When he had finished speaking somebody observed that his plan would cost £200,000,000, and convert every rate-payer into a porcupine. "We may have to pay £500,000,000 in the end for doing things in the present way," he answered; "and as to the porcupine, he is manageable enough if you handle him in the right way."—Temple Bar.

An Enterprise for Lending Money in New York.

Readers of one of the leading daily newspapers see every day such advertisements as the following:

A—A—LOANS MADE ON SALARIES. Address Box—Office.

An unfortunate clerk tells the story of his experiences with this advertiser, and from other sources it has been learned that there are many persons engaged in the nefarious business.

"I am a clerk, with a salary of twelve dollars a week. Recently I was in want of a lump sum of money, and the advertisement of a man who wants to lend money on salaries caught my eye. I wrote to him, and by the next mail received his name and address. It was W. Rodman Winslow, Room 22, Vanderbilt Building, Bookman and Nassau streets. I called at his office, and after some difficulty succeeded in borrowing fifty dollars. I was asked how long I had been in my position (I am a clerk on Nassau street), then what I was getting in the way of salary, and finally whether the cashier of the firm would agree to pay my weekly orders from my salary. I answered these questions, and said I would make the arrangements for the payments. On the next day I called again, and found the papers drawn up. Under these I was to pay six dollars a week for seven weeks, and eight dollars for the eighth week. But what do you think the charges were? First, I paid twenty-five cents for drawing the articles of agreement, then I had to pay twenty-five cents more for a Notary's certificate, and then forty-three cents interest on the money for two months. But the crowning charge was a premium of ten dollars for the accommodation. My account then stood thus:

Table with 2 columns: Item, Amount. Includes Paid for premium, Paid for agreement, Paid for notary, Paid for interest, Received in cash.

"Thus, when I paid interest, premium and fees (which I did at the very start, and had to do under the articles of agreement), I had thirty-nine dollars and seven cents, and was under engagement to pay fifty dollars in eight weeks. This, I estimated, is borrowing money at the rate of two hundred and fifty per cent. per annum. To tell you the struggle I had for those eight weeks to make both ends meet at my little home would be impossible. But I went through with it and was finally free from the blood-sucker."

"Are there many clerks who patronize these usurers?" "Hundreds of them. You see the advertisements are alluring, and most men are willing to pay well for accommodations of this kind. Of course, they feel sure when they find that they are paying that ten dollars premium, but they are in debt to the usurer, for one reason or another, at all times, and in the course of a year pay him one-half or perhaps more, of their salaries."—N. "As to the success of your medicine, this I know, whereas six months ago, I was weak, lean and stoop-shouldered, with excruciating, but no inward force to excruciating pains, which nights were spent in tossing and rolling upon a splintered bed, whose days were haunted by melancholy reveries or blighted by blinding headaches. I say, whereas, now, I feel myself a MAN—strong, muscular and stout of countenance, in eight of all this the RESTILL'S ORGANIC REMEDY has done for me.
