The Nomination of Cleveland.

The conspiracy has succeeded. By the use of every method objectionable fees this in politics Grover Cleveland has secured the Democratic nomination to the Presidency, or rather it has been secured for him. Had he been left to his own merits and his popularity with the masses of his party, Mr. Cleveland would scarcely firm have had a representation in the convention of his State. He was elected among the textuel professions, and that the sweet who accepts such an good material: second, exact proportion of his personal popularity, but because of the dissatisfaction of the Republicans with the manner in vention of his State. He was elected among the Republicans with the manner in which their own ticket had been made, and because nothing was really known and because nothing was ready about him, except that he was said to serme have made a good mayor of Buffalo. But since his election Mr. Cleveland had become better known. His popularity with the masses had not increased with this better knowledge. The political bosses, however, discovered that he was not so much of a reformer as had been pretended, and that by judicious management he could be made useful. The glittering prize of the Presidential non-ination was held before his eyes and he was easily led to do what the managers wished. It is not necessary to go beyond the declarations of the New York Democrats and Democratic paper to see how readily he abandoued the role of reformer and became the tol of rings, cliques and monopolies, at the bidding of the men who pranised in return to give him the liesidential po
