Curiosities of "Good Times."

People do some very funny things when they are drunk. The other night I met a noted citizen, well-dressed and dignified, coming out of a saloon with a ham hock, picked pretty clean, which he was gnawing at with drunken contentment. He had removed it from its place after it had gone through a hard day on the free-lunch counter. A few evenings ago I saw a young gentleman on Kearney street with his necktie up behind his ear, a champagne cork attached by a string to his collar-stud, dangling gracefully over his shirt-front, eating with great earnestness corn from its native cob. When it was all picked off he looked at it with tears in his eyes, murmuring in a low, pathetic tone: "The last corn's gone," and dropped it reluctantly into the gutter. Damon and Pythias came back to us in the two topers going home in the middle of the night. One of them slipped over a low bank and sank in mud up to his knees. The other tried to pull him out, without avail. Finally both gave up, and Pythias said:

"I will not leave you here alone."

He got in beside him and they waded for daylight and a Good Samaritan.
