THE RED CLOUD CHIEF

A. C. HOSMER, Proprietor

FRIDAY NOVEMBER 20, 1885.

The Wives of English Soldiers.

The general reader knows more, probably, about the solar system than about the details of regimental life; though he is always ready to listen to a tale of wrong like that which was lately told about soldiers' wives. It will be news to many that a soldier cannot lawfully get married, or is not recognized as lawfully married, until he has completed six years' service and is also the possessor of a good conduct badge.
Having served the allotted period, leave has to be obtained from the commanding officer of the regiment; but as a rule permission is granted readily enough. But even then it may be some time before the newly-wedded benedict can avail himself of the privilege of "free quarters."

The proportion of married men for whom accommodation is provided by Government is about 10 per cent of the total strength of the regiment, and when a man has obtained the necessary permission to enter the holy estate it may happen that the "married strength" of the regiment is already above the limit, in which case he has to support his wife and self on his regimental pay and rations. But he is allowed the privilege of "living out of mess"; that is to say, instead of taking his meals in barracks with the other men he is permitted to draw his rations and do his best to make three-quarters of a pound of meat per diem and one pound of bread fill two months instead of one. How the men contrive to make both ends meet under such circumstances is a mystery; but they do, and as a rule the married men of a regiment contrive to keep up a better all than their unnumbered companions. Of course there are exceptions; and many an officer will be able to call to mind some startling effects encountered in his subaltern's days on the occasions of "kit inspection"— as when what to all intents and purposes seemed to be a neatly folded linen shirt or dannel test has proved on closer inspection to be the remains of an article of female attire not usually worn by the male sex.

When once a married man has become enrolled on the "strength," his position is materially improved. He has his single room in barracks, with coal, gas, and wood free; his wife gets a share of the regimental washing; and if she is a good landlady frequently has some of the mess and officers' linen to wash. By the practice of strict economy a soldier's wife can, under such conditions, enjoy a more comfortable existence than if she is mated to an agricultural laborer or mechanic. But even under the most favorable conditions it is hard to lay by for a rainy day; and we may be sure that many of the wives of the brave fellows who have lately set out for the Sudan had not more than a few shillings to make a fresh start with.

It is not surprising, therefore, that many of these wives, when they are forced to lay by a few shillings, will find them a very small amount of money, when the bread of common sense, through force of circumstances, compelled to endure a spell of illness; but with the soldier's wife this necessity is not apparent. So long as her husband remains in the ranks (ill or well) so long will he receive a certain amount of daily pay; and although the conductor of his services is not responsible for his wife's health, it is self to her mind, the possibility of such an event is usually overlooked.

Putting aside the man's wife, there are in every company a large number of soldiers who are married, but whose wives have not managed to get to the front. In such cases, although the soldier's wife is not responsible for his health, it is self to her mind, the possibility of such an event is usually overlooked.

daily to scrape together the necessary funds for the railway journey, although, to their credit be it said, they as a rule do manage to solve this difficult problem some way or other, and before their husbands have fairly settled down in their new quarters they are generally located in a lodging within easy distance of the barrack gate.

Incredible as it may seem, not very many years ago as many as three or four soldiers' families had to accommodate themselves in a single room in barracks, the only division being curtains stretched across. After a time the authorities awoke to the fact that this state of things was not quite what it should be, and a single room to each couple has long been the order of the day.

Up in a Balloon.

"Cold? Well I should say so," said Sergeant Hammond, of the United States Signal Service Department, when questioned about his aerial voyage with Professor Samuel A. King. "We wore two suits of clothes and plenty of overcoats and fur gloves, but it was snapping cold away up there. We hardly expected to start on account of the temperature, but the balloon limbered up in the afternoon, and we decided to try it."

"How did it stand the flight? I was a bit nervous as we began to shoot up and my heart was uncomfortably near my mouth, but that wore off in a few minutes, and I was able to take observations and look over the side. We got up only 5,000 feet on account of approaching darkness, though we expected to rise a distance of two miles.
The scientific result was disappointing.
We started too late. I took readings of the various instruments at different heights on the way up, but was unable to see the instruments on the descent because of the darkness. The next trip we make I am going to have an electric light along, so that it shall not matter if we are up all night, so far as reading the instrument goes."—Philadelphia

My son has had rheumatism since he was four years old, suffering most in the spring. He has taken three bottles of Athlophors and I consider him tentatively cured of his trouble. C.
