Senators would have vielded without a question to the application of the spoils principle. But, having said this, all such premature removals carry with must be dishonesty or inefficiency. There would seem to be no escape from Presidential-Succession bill-has been this conclusion.

In many cases the men so removed. who know that no well-grounded charge can be brought against them, are anxious to have the imputations upon their good name cleared up. Many others are curious to ascertain what were the secret slanders that prevailed at Washington to secure their dismissal, and who the authors of those calumnies are. This much, it is felt, is due honest and faithful public servants. Bat it is gradually coming to be seen that there are many of these secret charges that will not bear scrutiny. Their author, never intended they should become public and are ashamed and face them. They are, theresy and interested in maintain-"rights of the President" inev can be relied on to rally to the defense of his prerogatives, and to soundly condemn those who would strip him of the powers with which the constitution clothes him. The Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer, one of the most the erupulous Democratic organs in the country, gives this bit of secret history in a letter to that paper, which illustrates the disgraceful metaods that have been resorted to in order to obtain office: Mr. McCormick was the collector of Interral revenue of the State of West Virginia. Senators for that State, the members of Congress and the commissioner of internal reterior, a chizen of the Stare, all united in an effort to induce the Pres dent to remove bent. Mr. Cieveland would not move a pegunless charges were filed against McCormick. Fire Senators and those who sought McCormick's removal were loath to place on hie were made. Mr. Laurd, formerly a chief clerk manding that the men who would thus stab an honest, faithful official in the back, should be dragged out into the light where decent people can get a look at them? And who can blame these secret assassins, on the other hand, for desiring to skulk in the darkness as they have been doing? This same correspondent mark it, a Demoeral, not a Republican goes on to say that not less than ten Democratic Senntors have been busy during the past few months filing charges indiscriminately against Republican officeholders, affecting both their public and private character. Their only pretense of justification is that some of their constituents in each case made these accusations, and that they indorsed them over Compare such gilt-edged sneaks with the men who boldly indorse a State prison bird like Barney Conroy, of Indianapolis, as "a hard-working, honest

AN INCOMPETENT BODY.

The Outcome of the Labors of the Demecratic House of Representatives.

It is already evident that there is small hope of any beneficial legislation them the inevitable inference of the from this Congress. More than two discovery of something wrong. There | months of the session have passed and only one measure of importance—the sent to the President. But there are several bills pending to remedy the admitted defects in that measure. The lief Senate has passed the Dakotz bill, an important measure concerning Indian reservations, the Utah bill, one to fix the salaries of district judges, the bill to provide arms for the militia, and many others of less value. It has debated the Electoral-Count bill, and has number of important measures. It is clear that the slow progress of legislation can not be charged to the Senate. Of the bills it passed at the last session two hundred and seventy-five of them were never considered by the House.

The cause of the delay is found in the incapacity of this representative Democratic body. Last year the rules and Mr. Randall were made the scapegoats. But that difficulty has been removed, the appropriation bills have been distributed, and what is the result? Not a single important measure, with the exception of the Shipping bill introduced by a Republican member, has gone to the Senate. A Pension bill which will take six million dollars annually from the treasury has been passed and a large number of private claims. Not a single appropriation bill has yet been considered, and only one
