There should be an effort made to add the incandescent electric light system to our already perfect system of electric lights. It would be a big thing for Red Cloud.

The Red Cloud Mills are building up a splendid reputation for its flour and the demand in Kansas City, Denver and other cities is equal to that of the celebrated Wisconsin Mills. The company is a live and enterprising one and make fine flour.

We would suggest to the council the feasibility of moving the electric light in Jackson's grove to the brow of the hill. It would certainly be much more satisfactory and would throw light to good advantage. As it is it might just as well be boxed.

Great excitement was created Tuesday over a "little tar pot" of Rufus Misk's which caught fire while he was tarring the Moon block roof. A big cloud of smoke arose and people thought this great metropolitan daily had gone up in smoke but she still lives, tar pot or no tar pot.

SHE LACKS DISCRETION.

How a Washington Woman Injured Herself and Her Friends.

A lady who is now dwelling in Washington, as she has been for the last three or four years, in one of the finest houses of the city, who has no end of money, and all that sort of thing, is in serious trouble, says a Washington correspondent, and feels that the social season for her has been a failure. She was not blessed with the gift of discretion, and the worse things she has said and done have been the town talk ever since she made her appearance in Washington. The trouble this time came from an attempt to separate the sheep from the goats, as it were, in a social way. This lady, who always has entertained elegantly, and desired to do so more than ever this winter, issued invitations for three teas, which were intended to introduce her lovely young daughter to society. To the first tea all the creme de la creme were asked and went. To the second tea another company, a degree lower in cast, as caste is understood in Washington, were invited, and to the third all the rest were told to come like poor relations.

It does not seem to have occurred to the hostess that her friends might not like to be classified in this way, but the discrimination would not have been so conspicuous if the lady herself had not "given it away." To a particular friend who was not in town when the first tea was given, she sent an invitation to the second, and explained that she was sorry because he "could not meet our best set." The little remark was innocently repeated as characteristic of a lady who often said foolish things, and then was maliciously circulated, as such remarks often are. It was over the whole town in a week. Those who attended the second tea didn't like it any to well, but the third lot were howling mad, and not more than a dozen came, although a hundred or more were expected and provided for. People then began to ask their acquaintances if they belonged to Mrs. So-and-So's first, second or third set. Those who were asked to the first set enjoyed it, but the others didn't see the joke.

Finally the lady learned the cause of the small attendance at her third entertainment, and felt very bad about it, for she is too good-humored to intentionally offend any one. Then she set about to contrive some way of retrieving the error, but instead of getting out fell still deeper into the mire. A charity ball was given with tickets at two dollars a head. She purchased two hundred of these tickets and sent them, with her compliments, to all who had received invitations to the third tea. It was kindly intended, but had an effect opposite to that desired, for those who received the compliments felt more like poor relations than ever. Some threw the tickets into the fire; others returned them to the lady with indignant or sarcastic notes, saying that while they were not so rich as she they were still able to pay their way to any entertainment they wanted to attend, and were not accepting charity. And at the ball it was a common joke for the great ones to say, "if they came in on 25c tickets, they would be in the interval."

A Wedding in Ireland.

An amusing story comes from Tralee in Ireland. A wedding was about to be celebrated, when, at the last moment, the bride's parents refused to pay her dowry, alleging as their reason that the groom had been recently wounded by the Fenians, and was still under the protection of the police. According to them it was reasonable to suppose that the Fenians would not fail on the next occasion, and that, in consequence, the dowry would be sacrificed. After a long discussion a compromise was agreed upon and the marriage was celebrated, the husband receiving £50 in hand and a promissory note for £100 payable in twelve months if he were not killed in the interval.
