ANOTHER CATCH-BASIN.

DR. JONES, one of the most prominent citizens of Cincinnati, murdered by his coachman—the Body Thrown in a Catch-Basin.—The Murderer's Confession.

CINCINNATI, July 25.—The body of Dr. A. E. Jones was found yesterday morning in a manhole not far from his residence. He had been murdered and robbed.

The doctor was in his seventy-seventh year but was as active as a man of fifty. He had always had an inclination to military life and kept it up by holding a connection with the Ohio National Guards, serving for a long time as surgeon of the First regiment. Governor Forsaker, who was his neighbor, appointed him a member of his staff as Surgeon-General. He had been active in public affairs, serving often in the Municipal Council, and had besides held several offices under appointment from the General Government. He was perhaps more widely known in Cincinnati than any other man.

Dr. Jones left his house about 3:30 o'clock Thursday afternoon, wearing no coat, his feet in slippers and went in the direction of his stables. That was the last seen of him alive. The family did not become alarmed until after night, and then prosecuted their search quietly until Friday, when notice was given to the police.

Friday a trail of blood was discovered opposite the doctor's stable on Cemetery street, and being followed was traced to Park avenue, thence south two or three squares to the junction of Cypress street and Francis lane, where, on the grass, was a pool of blood. It was here in a manhole of the sewer that the body was found yesterday morning. It was sewed in a horse blanket and was drawn out by means of a rope fastened around it by a man who had been lowered for that purpose.

The body had been doubled up compactly, as if for convenience in carrying, and it is apparent that the trail of blood was that which trickled from the doctor's wounds as his murderer carried him to the place where he thought to conceal forever the trace of his crime, for he hoped the water would carry the body into the river.

It was found that the doctor's gold watch and his money were gone. This must have been the motive for the murder, as the doctor had not an enemy in the world. The police are already making arrests.

The theory is that the murderer was a colored man, colored hostler, and that after committing the crime he hid the body until night and then, placing it into a grain sack, carried it to its place of concealment. Bligh was at the house all day Friday and told of his last interview with the Colonel. When he left Friday night he said he would return at 5:30 yesterday morning, but he has not yet been found. A hoe in the stable bears marks which are pronounced to be blood stains.

BLIGH ARRESTED—HIS CONFESSION.

CINCINNATI, July 25.—Bligh, the missing hostler, charged with the murder of Dr. A. E. Jones, has been arrested. When taken before Superintendent Deitch, of the police headquarters, without hesitation or restraint he made a full confession of the crime. His manner was easy and his story of horror was told with a little feeling as if he had been narrating a most commonplace event of a dull day's experience. His story was told as follows: "My name is Charles A. Bligh. I was born at Richmond, Ky., a man twenty-nine years old; am married. In March last I came to this city and on the third of Wednesday in March engaged to work for Dr. A. E. Jones as a hostler and for other work at $5 a week. On the afternoon of Thursday last I was working in the garden pulling weeds, when the doctor came out in his shirt sleeves, wearing slippers and a slouch hat, and began to scold me. I had just come out of the barn, where I had gone. The doctor told me he wanted the weeds pulled out of the coley and he did not want any more excuses about it. The doctor was a good looking man, a little stocky and stout, but it did not hurt. It was just a little stick. This was near the stable door. He talked pretty fierce and again said he did not want any more excuses. I became angry and as the doctor passed by me I picked up a bit of oak stick and, using both hands, I struck him a blow from behind on the back of the head. He fell and was speechless, but not dead. He was not able to move—he only breathed. I went on with my work in the garden until half past six o'clock, when I got a sack in the barn that had been used for oats and packed a body in it. He was breathing yet and drew up his legs so that I could easily push his body in the sack. I then tied it up with a hitching strap and went into the house and got my supper as usual. The folks asked me if I had seen the doctor and I told them that I hadn't. After supper they sent me to Mr. Thornton's, the doctor's son-in-law, to see if he was there. I came back and told them the doctor had not been there. Then I went to the power house of the cable road and had a talk with a colored man and came back about ten o'clock, took the sack on my shoulder and carried it down Park avenue to the manhole. Two men were ahead of me as I went, but I kept out of their way. I laid the sack down on the grass while I took off the iron covering of the manhole and then threw it in and covered up the manhole and went back to Colonel Jones' house and soon after went to my own house on Washington avenue. Next day I went back and worked as usual till afternoon, when they told me I need not work any more—only I should stay around. I answered questions many times that day that I did not see the doctor. After I got home last night Andy Hudson came to me and said the detectives had been to see him to ask what kind of a man I was. Hudson told them I was all right so far as he knew, but he said from the way the detectives talked he thought they were about to put the doctor's disappearance on me. This morning I did not get up until after six o'clock. I then packed my valise and went down to Fulton to take the train for Madisonville, but missed the train and walked out the railroad and picked up a man who carried a trunk. When I got to Madisonville I tried to find some people I used to know in Kentucky, and when I got to Simon Bush's house the detectives got me. I did not take Colonel Jones' watch nor his money. I did not know he had his watch or money with him.
