The Italian parliament was convened to-day. In his speech opening the session King Humbert said that the recent elections for members of the chamber of deputies had rendered the state more solid than ever. Italy he declared, was faithful to her foreign alliances, and the cordial friendships that existed between the powers had dissipated the danger of international complications. Most reassuring anticipations everywhere prevailed. He announced that bills to improve the condition of the workmen should be introduced. In conclusion his majesty said: "Following my father's example I have always respected the rights of my ancestors' religion, but I will never suffer my sovereign authority to be derogated in that religion's name." This utterance was greeted with enthusiastic applause.
