must have food, and we must have money in order to get it; and there is but one way, so far as I can see, to get money-but one way. And yet I dislike to think of mortgaging the farm. I have had experiences with mortgages, and I dread them. They are the bane of a poor man's life, the cancer that cats in deeper and deeper until he is left destitute and homeless." John Green shuddered as he drew this picture, for it brought back to him in all its ghastly vividness that time, but a few years before, when that yampire, the mortgage, had eaten up his last dollar and turned himself and family from their loved little home east. For a long time he sat in moody silence, now with his face buried in his hands, and now looking with a sad, faraway gaze out across the endless stretch of bare, brown prairie to where the sun, like a great round ball of fire, was slowly sinking behind the edge of the earth. She was a perfect example of mental and physical debility-a living result of hard times and "man's inhumanity to man." She was dying, inch by inch, of worry, want and work. John Green glanced up when his wife appeared in the doorway, and motioning her to a seat beside him attempted to assume a less melancholy air as he from the store, Markham having again

"John, it is useless for us to try to disguise our feelings any longer," Mary replied. "We know and understand each other too well for that, and we know that there is nothing on earth for us to hope for. I have all along af- ed her question, and Louise, having no fected a cheerfulness I did not feel, bechase I thought it helped to lighten your burdens a little, but now we perfectly understand each other, and to dissemble longer is folly. I know what you suffer, John, for I have seen it iver the first, and I know that there is no hope in your heart."

"Mary, don't talk so," John pleaded. 'The future does look dark and blank, but it may not be so bad as it seems. We must keep up courage."

Mary shook her head despondently, and the tears she had with so much effort restrained broke loose and flowed thick and fast. John placed his arm about her and drawing her to him laid her head on his shoulder.

"Mary," he said, "I know the prospect is discouraging, but there will be a way of getting through it. Next year we shall raise good crops and have plenty, and only a few short months of privation lie between now and then."

"Yes, it may be as you say, John," much as possible. Mary replied: "but how are we to live through those few months? You know having overheard her interview with
