A large number of our enthusiastic republicans went to Hastings on Tuesday night to hear the famous Congressman Horr, of Michigan, talk on republican issues. They report a fine speech.
A young man from Kansas, whose name might be Dobbins, was hunting snakes the other night with the boys. He was a great sucker and held the sack for more than thirty minutes in one of the lumber yards waiting for the boys to chase the snake into it. He would have been there yet if one of the boys had not taken compassion on him and told him that the other fellows were "making foolishness mit him."

Pretty Good Hit.
Those who have any remaining doubts as to the close relationship of the democratic party to the south and its principles and tenets should have all doubts removed by the knowledge that a portion of the democratic platform adopted at Chicago was copied bodily from the Confederate Constitution, where it declares that it is "a fundamental principle of the democratic party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue only."

ABSOLUTELY PURE

THE GREAT WEST

As Seen by the Rev. E. L. Ely, of this City.

With a decided lack of confidence in my ability to interest the readers of the Great Family Weekly, otherwise known as the Red Cloud Chief, I comply with the request of the editor to furnish a sketch of my trip to the mountains and as it is at his suggestion, it will be his fault if the portion of THE CHIEF which this occupies is not worth reading.
To begin with, I would like to express my appreciation of the kindness of the friends in the A. O. U. W. who made this trip possible for me. There was nothing of interest in the journey until I left Cheyenne, which I reached on Tuesday morning going via Denver.
On leaving Cheyenne one is soon impressed that he is going up hill both by the puffing of the two massive engines which it took to draw a short train and by looking back over the track. There is also the peculiar sensation which is noticeable, caused by the increasing rarity of the air.
At Sherman, 38 miles from Cheyenne at an altitude of 8247 feet, the highest point is reached on the U. P. R. R. between Omaha and the Pacific Ocean. Here one can see Long's Peak nearly 300 miles away and Pikes Peak about 150 miles south. The next point of interest is the high bridge over Dals Creek. It is an iron span 650 feet long, and as we pass over it, the creek, 127 feet below us looks like a mere rivulet.
A long level stretch of country comes next which is the great Laramie plain.
We are almost inclined to think we have left civilization behind us until we glide into Laramie City which, with a population of over 6,000, is seemingly entitled to be called The Gem City of the Rockies. Here is located the State University and Penitentiary. From here the country is more broken until Rawlins is reached at 1:30 p. m. An excellent view of the town may be had from the train and one is at once impressed with its solid appearance. Its buildings are mostly of stone. Conspicuous among them are some very handsome churches, suggesting that the people of Wyoming are not altogether Godless if some of them do rustic ostle belong to some one else.
The remainder of the time is passed in looking out of the car window at scenery that may be said to be varied, but is easily described.
At first, it seemed to be made up of sky, sage brush and sand; again it would seem to be mostly sage brush, sky and sand; farther along however, it was mostly sand, sky and sage brush.
Of course, these are all very good in their place and I can readily see why the Almighty made them. Well no, I can't either, come to think, see why He made so much sage brush, unless for making sage tea, and even for this the supply seems to greatly exceed the demand. I think one could gather enough off one square mile of that country to convert the Pacific Ocean into that kind of medicine.
In the afternoon the Conductor called my attention to what is known as the summit of the Rockies and that, while now one could see back 150 miles in two minutes, he could not see 100 yards. This is not the highest point however, but rather I suppose center of the system.
At 5:30 we are at Rock Springs, the great coal mining town where 35 Chinamen were slaughtered by the miners a few years ago. The Chinese however did not all heed the warning that they must "go," and are still here in considerable number.
At 3:30 a. m., we are at Pocatello, Idaho, which is located on the Indian Reservation occupied by the Shoshones and Barmooks.
Seeing so many buildings lighted up at that hour, I asked a gentleman who got on the train there what they were and he informed me they were gambling houses. I ventured some remarks about the prevalence of this vice in that country and from the response of the man I concluded I was not moralizing with the right man, and as he seemed willing to drop the subject, I had no objection. I concluded he had been betting on the wrong color but didn't ask about it, for, although the conversation so far had been quite interesting, I had had enough.
North of Pocatello are some pretty little villages and as we pass the little streams, there are numerous Indian wigwams to be seen where the Indians are spending their vacation, catching mountain trout and hunting. I suppose an Indian's vacation however, lasts the year round, for, with a wife always ready and willing to cut the wood and draw the water and do all the other hard work there is no reason an Indian should not be a nabob.
I saw a big, brawny Indian loafing around the depot at one place, while a poor old squaw, skinny enough to occupy a place in the dime museum, as the living skeleton loaded a pack on her back that would almost discourage a mule and go trudging off toward the wigwam a mile or more out.
Whatever the philosopher may have decided to be the special mission of the North American Indian as a race, on this continent, most of them have decided as individuals that it isn't to work.
But before we have time to moralize very much about the Indian and his aversion to work, our attention is called to another class of human beings of which there are to be found an abundance of "sample copies" in that country whose aversion to work fully equals that of the Indian, the tramp. Judging from appearances in some places, I don't know but I would describe the scenery in the way already given, adding however, "and tramps."

Lost to all sense of shame, big brawny men do not hesitate to walk up to the passengers where the train stops and beg for money.
There is much of interest to be seen looking out of the window as we go north. In the distance are the mountains on each side, with now and then a peak taller than his neighbors, whose top glistens with the sun shining on the snow. We are skimming along through a valley of gentle slopes and fertile soil. Now, we see a farm with a few acres under cultivation, there a perfect garden of flowers, covering the hillsides with blue and yellow colors predominating.
The point of greatest interest on this line is Beaver Canyon which we reach at about 7:30 Wednesday morning. Here the railroad runs along a narrow defile in the mountains. On one side are barren rocks rising sometimes hundreds of feet almost perpendicularly close by the track, and on the other side is a little mountain stream, beautiful as could be created by the imagination. I said on the other side, but it is first on one side, then, darting under the track, it appears on the other side. Its waters are as clear as crystal and well stocked with mountain trout.
We reach Butte City at 1:30 p. m., and for the first time I found myself in a typical mining town of the west. After spending the afternoon here I took the train on the Northern Pacific for Helena at which place I arrived about 5:30 the next morning. Possibly I may tell your readers something of Helena next week.
