EX-SENATOR PADDOCK,

Explains the Free Coinage of Silver Satisfactorily.

A great industrial depression in England, resulting from a gorged and impoverished state of the European markets, caused by over production, exhaustive competition, and the demoralization of the South American and Australian trade, made extensive liquidation in manufactures necessary during the past two years. This was only possible through enormous consignments to this country—the great dumping ground of the world—where commodities, whatever the amount, that must be sold for what they will bring, can always find purchasers at some price. These consignments, added to the enormous shipments earlier made in anticipation of the higher prices to result from the operations of the McKinley tariff, had greatly swelled our imports. The South American and Australian disasters also demoralized the London money market to such an extent as to cause a corresponding liquidation in securities.

The markets of the United States are ready at all times on cable notice from London to buy back our own securities, which, when conditions are normal, are extensively dealt in in the London and other European markets, and pay for them in gold. Millions of dollars of these securities have been resold by former London purchasers to our own capitalists. While all this has been going on the state of the produce market here and in Europe has been such as to largely reduce the shipments of our agricultural products abroad. And in addition to all this the European travel fever has carried increased thousands of our citizens across the ocean who have been spending annually in the different countries of Europe an amount of American gold estimated by United States treasury officials at a hundred millions of dollars.

All of these things have operated to produce a large balance of trade against us which we have been obliged to pay in gold. This is the exact explanation of our loss of gold.
If the Sherman act had never been heard of, and not a single ounce of silver had been bought under it, all that I have stated would have happened just the same.
It is a lesson so plain that he who runs may read, and cannot fail to understand if he will.
And yet the Sherman act, which has had little more to do with these events than the celebrated Pope's bull against the comet, has been charged by the monometallist and the ignorant with the entire responsibility, directly or indirectly, for them all, and the resulting exportations of our gold to Europe.

I am a republican, always have been, and always expect to be. I voted in the republican caucus for the Sherman act, as did John Sherman at one extreme and Teller and Stewart at the other extreme, and as did all the other republican senators stand between these two extremes, because each, whatever his particular view, believed it to be the best obtainable solution of the vexed silver problem at that time. But that action was tentative only. Mr. Sherman voted for it under protest, because through such a solution he would escape free and unlimited coinage legislation, which, without some such compromise, seemed inevitable. Mr. Teller and Mr. Stewart voted for it because they thought it was better to take what they considered a half loaf, then, without further contention, rather than seize the whole loaf by force, which would likely result in a revulsion of sentiment which might afterwards cause the loss of the whole loaf: I and others like myself who favored progressive bimetalism, by providing for the free coinage of the American product only, voted for it because it seemed to be a step in that direction. As a bimetalist I am now in favor of the repeal of the sections of the act which provide for bullion purchases, and the substitution thereof of a provision for the coinage of the American product. Indeed this has been my contention from the beginning.

Permit me to quote from a speech delivered during the campaign of last year in explanation of this view generally:
"I voted for the act of 1890 under which 4,500,000 ounces of silver bullion are purchased each month. I now incline to the opinion that it would be better to coin all of our home product, under some limitations perhaps, than to continue these purchases. The home product of last year only exceeded these purchases of bullion by about 4,000,000 ounces.

"The paper currency issued for bullion under the Sherman act is payable in gold and silver, at the option of the owner. This is another tax upon our limited gold supply, which helps to increase the perils of the present financial situation. Moreover, it operates to depress rather than appreciate the price of silver, because the characteristic of coin money for it is not recognized; and, second, while dealt in as a commodity only, it is not so dealt in in sufficient quantity to reduce the surplus to the point where appreciation in value must commence.

"It is the unrequired surplus of any commodity or thing for which there is no purchaser, which depresses the price. It is the state of the chances or probabilities of the sale of such surplus from day to day that determines the market value. It is the 10 per cent or whatever it may be in the way of surplus, which we can neither use nor sell at home, and for which we must find a foreign market, that makes the price for the whole. And in case of silver it is perfectly safe to say that an increase in the demand for it in England if equal only to our purchases of 4,500,000 ounces monthly, would make such a draft on the world's surplus store of silver as to cause its price to gradually appreciate to par. When it should reach par through such a method it would stay there. It would become a great reserve money, thus relieving gold in a large degree for reserve uses. Except in the subsidiary denominations silver can never become a free circulating coin. Indeed, the silver dollar in its currency uses at the present time is rather of the nature of a subsidiary coin. It is too cumbersome, too heavy to be ever again freely used, even in ordinary transactions, except in small sums. But its value for reserve and other fiduciary purposes when once accepted, will be permanently and unalterably established at par with gold, and every dollar thus used will contribute an additional dollar to the world's currency."

We Mean Business.
The public is quick to appreciate an article of merit, and when the publishers of the State Journal began offering their Semi-Weekly at only $1.00 a year, the same price that others ask for their weeklies which only give half as many papers, the subscription list doubled in a few months, and has since been growing with wonderful rapidity, leaving the old-fashioned weeklies way behind. People don't see any use in waiting a whole week for the news when they can get it fresh twice a week for the same money. Readers of the Semi-Weekly Journal get 104 papers a year for their $1.00 which is less than one cent per copy, and they find the paper almost as good as a daily. If you have not yet tried this great paper, do so at once. It gives you the markets twice a week, which alone is worth the price. Some of our special offers are: The Journal and either the Standard History of the United States, Stanley's Adventures in Africa, Life of Spurgeon, Life of Harrison, handsomely bound books, postage all paid, for $1.40. The Journal and Weekly New York Tribune both one year, $1.25. For $2.00 we will send the Journal two years and one of the above books free; for $1.65 we will send the Journal and Tribune, and any one of the books. We mean business and our offers are right down to hard-time prices. Send for a free sample at once. Address,
