THE STREET CAR CODE.

A Practical Solution for a Much Vexed Question in Etiquette. The question of street car politeness or gallantry may be regarded as settled in Paris if the decision of one of the leading papers, the Figaro, may be taken as final. Inasmuch as we have had a great deal of discussion upon this same subject in this country, the views of the French journal and some of its fair correspondents may be interesting to New Yorkers. A correspondent asked the Figaro if a gentleman seated in an omnibus or a tramway, with all the seats occupied, should give up his place to a lady the moment she appeared at the door. The Parisian journal says that in a public conveyance each one should occupy the place for which he has paid. This, it says, is the opinion of the majority of our readers, and particularly the society ladies who never wear diamonds in an omnibus. They don't admit that ladies should accept the politeness, or rather the service, of gentlemen whom they do not know. One of them gives this opinion: "When a lady is contented with the cheap means of locomotion provided by the omnibus companies she accepts all the conditions. In all cities where there are omnibuses, tramways and other public vehicles a woman can see immediately whether there is room inside or not. If, on seeing that there is no vacant place, she nevertheless enters the car she takes a position which she ought to sustain. To permit a man to disturb himself for her when she might wait for another car if it was impossible for her to remain standing, would be an evidence on her part of a want of good breeding. It is very easy for her to thank the gentleman negatively and politely in a few short words, so that the incident may not be prolonged. Nothing can be more annoying for seated travelers than this mutual exchange of so-called courtesies, and congratulations which goes on at their knees and threatens their feet, perhaps more or less afflicted with corns. Remain seated, gentlemen, remain seated; the ladies cannot complain of that, without giving satisfaction to those men who reproach them for their want of logic. Since they insist upon equality before the law, with all the rights and privileges of men, they should put up with all that men have to endure. A woman in an omnibus should remain standing when there is no vacant seat, just as a man does under the same circumstances." Another correspondent says: "Remain seated, gentlemen; you can do it without a breach of politeness. When fine ladies with their diamonds take the omnibus or the tramway, do not disturb yourselves for them, for if you do you will only be a dupe; but if you see a poor woman carrying a child or a bundle then give her your place immediately. That is not politeness; it is simply duty, possibly charity."

AN ODD BEGGAR.

He Was a Dog, and a Remarkably Intelligent One, Too. One afternoon, while strolling along the Calle Ancha, in Cadiz, I met several acquaintances at the corner of that street and the Plaza Constitution, says a writer in Harper's Young People. We stopped for a friendly chat, and were about to separate when my attention was attracted to a handsome French poodle dog at my side, seated on his haunches and looking up in my face. His comical little countenance expressed so much intelligence that I stooped and patted him on the head, when he commenced barking and violently working his forelegs after the manner of dogs who have been taught "to beg." "What can he wish?" said I. "Surely not my cigar?" But having seen dogs who were fond of tobacco I held my cigar toward him. As soon as he smelled it he snorted and bounded away, only to return immediately and resume his previous position. I was now puzzled, but seeing several beggars in the neighborhood concluded that he belonged to one of them and desired a piece of money. Taking a large "copper" from my pocket I held it before his eyes. So great were his manifestations of delight that I was certain that I had divined his wants. I threw the money to him, which he caught in his mouth, and running across the street disappeared in a bakery. To our astonishment he emerged from the shop in a few moments, bearing in his mouth a neatly wrapped bundle. One of my friends tried to take it from him, but he would not allow this, and insisted on placing it at my feet. I picked it up, removed the wrapper, and found a large bun dusted with sugar. This he ate with great relish. We remained for awhile to see if he would besiege another passer-by; but no, he had had enough for the present, and, coiling himself up in the doorway, settled down for a quiet nap. This exhibition of intelligence I think worthy of note, and particularly so for the reason that the dog was apparently acting independently, there being no one near to prompt or direct him.

Continued Sound. The intensity of confined sound is finely illustrated at Causbrook castle, Isle of Wight, where there is a well two hundred feet deep and twelve feet in diameter, walled and lined with smooth masonry. Although this is an unusual depth for a well even in the British isles, yet when a pin is dropped into it the sound of striking the surface of the water one hundred and eighty-two feet below can be distinctly heard. In a cast-iron water pipe of Paris, which forms a continuous tube with only two slight crooks, and those near its middle, the lowest whisper at one end may be distinctly heard at the other, although the pipe is three thousand one hundred and twenty feet in length. When some experiments in this line were being conducted a pistol fired at one end of the tube actually blew out a lighted candle held at the other end and violently ejected the shavings, feathers, paper, etc., which had been placed in the end of the pipe by the experimenters.

WEATHER FORECASTS.

Furnished Expressly for The Chief for Webster County. (Copyrighted by W. T. Foster.) St. JOSEPH, Mo., Sept. 8.—My last bulletin gave forecasts of the storm wave to cross the continent from September 8th to 13th, and the next will reach the Pacific coast about the 13, across the western mountains by close of the 14th, the great central valleys from the 15th to 17th, and the eastern states about the 18th. This disturbance will be of more than average force, and will cause severe winds and heavy rains in limited areas as it passes eastward. The warm wave will cross the western mountains about the 13th, the great central valleys about the 15th, and the eastern states about the 17th. The cool wave will cross the western mountains about the 16th, the great central valleys about the 18th, and the eastern states about the 20th, HURRICANES. The August West India hurricanes seriously affect the weather on the continent during August, causing fluctuations of temperature and, to some extent, breaking up the periodic changes in the weather. I am not yet able to forecast, accurately, these hurricanes, although I know about the time to expect them. To miss their dates a few days causes errors in all the weather forecasts for about the time they are in the vicinity of the West Indies, and as they move very slowly, they sometimes interfere with our weather for ten days at a time. Very early frosts in the United States are caused by West India hurricanes, and the frost that occurred along our northern borders about August 25th, was caused by the hurricane that did so much damage along the coast from Florida to New York. Hurricanes throw immense quantities of atmosphere to great elevations and when the atmosphere rises in one place, it must come down in another. The coming down that results from a West India hurricane begins in the upper Missouri river valleys, forming an unusually large and high barometer, in which the cool air pours down from above. Those high barometers are usually about 2,000 miles northwest of the hurricanes, and if viewed from one of the other planets, would appear as a large dark spot; dark because the atmosphere is more attenuated, thinner; more expanded in a high barometer than a low one, and the weather is clear. As seen from outside of our atmosphere, this high barometer would have a spiral motion, with the sun's movement, or with the movements of the watch hands, while the hurricane would appear to reverse all this. Its whirl would be against the sun, contrary to the movement of the watch hands, and around the center the weather would be cloudy or hazy. At the top of the hurricane the electric current hurries the clouds away towards the northwest where the moisture is decomposed and becomes transparent as it enters the top of the high barometer. That moisture is carried down to the earth through the spiral whirl of the electric current, and is deposited as a heavy dew or a hoar frost. In my letters of July 8th and 15th I gave warning that August would bring most remarkable weather and very destructive storms. Over 1,000 charts for that month were sent out to the readers of these letters, warning them of destructive storms to follow August 14th and 24th. The storms were well timed, but took a route more to the south than was calculated. July, August and September are the hurricane months, and altogether these storms constitute the most interesting feature of the weather. Millions of dollars' worth of property and hundreds of lives are lost around the gulf of Mexico and along the Atlantic coast by these dreadful storms, and the frosts caused by them in August and September in our northern states are the greatest of all destroyers of our crops. The dates of these hurricanes and the resultant frosts may certainly be known, if the right efforts were made by the National Weather bureau. No effort has ever been made to give us a complete record of the great storms, and no effort to learn their causes. Money appropriated by the government for these purposes, would be well spent.

Nearly all the valuable discoveries have been made by and at the private expense of individuals. Much greater progress could be made were it not for the want of funds even by the independent investigator, but when one is ensconced in a government position with a fixed salary at his back and a million dollars for expenses all progress appears to cease and it may be best, probably is best, that progressive men be left unsupported to dig their way through the great Chinese wall of prejudice on the part of the people, delving into almost the past finding out laws of nature. Those tropical storms are the greatest drawbacks to the success of my work, and I must discover their periods.
