A RABBIT CHASE.—S rangers coming to Red Cloud, especially traveling men a great many perhaps who have never seen a live Jack rabbit, often suggest a ride on the prairie just to see the nimble quadrupeds hop away, or to test the running qualities of that animal with a chase by dogs. Several of the traveling fraternity were conversing on that subject the other day, and suggested a purse for the purchase of a swift Jack rabbit, and then to turn it loose on the prairie, and see which dog could catch it first. Accordingly Al. Aultz, who as is well known, has an endless variety of the most thoroughbred dogs in the state, started in pursuit of and captured a Jack rabbit, which they turned loose on a large barren field, and set the swiftest dogs in the city after it. The rabbit started in a leisurely gait, which is characteristic with that animal, but knowing the dogs to be in hot pursuit, he gradually attained speed, until, as a spectator remarked, there seemed to be nothing but a blue streak followed by a line of dogs of all sizes. The rabbit acted admirably as advance guard for some time running a mile or so and then turning sharply to delude the dogs J. O. Butler's canine "Guess" took the lead of the chasers closely followed by Mr. Dyer's dog "Nellie," and last, but not least, came Al. Aultz's dog "Sport," which just as the rabbit passed over the hill was soon to pass the other dogs, and a part of the crowd soon went to the hollow, and found the dogs in charge of their prey. The chase was very interesting, and witnessed by many spectators.

Turmoil in Bohemia.

Our Bohemian friends will be pleased to read the following article, from the Bohemian Voice, published at Omaha, Nebr.

Almost simultaneously with the defeat of Gladstone's home rule bill in the House of Lords, news of the most threatening character comes from Bohemia. Owing to home rule agitation by the Young Czechs and repeated demonstrations against the government—such as tearing down of imperial eagle in various cities of Bohemia, hissing down the imperial anthem on the anniversary of the emperor, singing of the marseillaise and rioting in the streets of Prague, on September 12th, the day of the issuance of the irrevocable imperial rescript, wherein Francis Joseph had promised to crown himself as king of Bohemia,—the ministry' it is said, had suspended articles of the constitution bearing on citizens' rights and suspending trial by jury for one year in the city of Prague, and the surrounding districts of Vinohrady, Karlin and Smichov. The clauses suspended include the freedom of the press and the right of holding public meetings. Prague has been placed in a state of siege. Emperor Francis Joseph, according to these dispatches, had sanctioned the decree of the ministry.

As a result of these repressive measures, the whole country has been thrown in a dangerous state of excitement. In Prague, which is the center of the agitations, revolutionary cries and speeches, songs and literature are to be heard of found on every side; the streets are being patrolled by squads of police and detachments of cavalry. The military are confined to the barracks and the public buildings are strongly guarded. Opposition newspapers are being confiscated daily and some of them have been suppressed altogether. Official sheets also hint that some of the leaders of this anti-dynastic movement will be arrested and tried for treason.

Any one who has watched the course of the Young Czechs within the last year; who has read the bold speeches delivered in various parts of Bohemia and Moravia to the Young Czechs constituents—speeches breathing the fiercest defiance—will not be surprised at these demonstrations. They were anticipated. In starting them the Young Czechs calculated like this: the Old Czechs (a party now almost extinct) were tame and submissive, readily yielding to Taaffe's blandishment and their policy was an utter failure. The Magyars on the contrary, were always truculent and unyielding and they finally carried their point. Hence, let us also combat the government and like Magyars we shall win.

American newspapers which have commented on these disturbances do not grasp the true situation in Bohemia. We have seen a western newspaper of great respectability expressing the opinion that the Young Czechs are a set of political banterers without following, who should be dealt with summarily by the government. Again, some newspapers seem to think that things are coming to a crisis in Bohemia and that revolution is imminent there. Both of these opinions are wrong. The Young Czechs are the dominant party in Bohemia to day and the best blood of the nation is at their beck and call. They are, however, the victims of the vile electoral system of Austria, and as a result, with all their strength, ability and intelligence they are rendered powerless. The notion is equally absurd that Bohemians are on the point of revolution. It must be manifest to every sober minded man that revolution at this time, when Bohemia is girded with millions of bayonets and cannon, would be a madness—a leap in the dark. Instead of ameliorating the condition of the people, revolution would only tighten their chains. What course the Young Czechs must pursue in order to regain our lost independence, is either to unite—join hands with clerical and the historical nobility—and united and seconded by the other Slaves in the parliament, there is no party strong enough to resist their just demands; or they must remove the present electoral law and give one man one vote and no more.

The troubles in Bohemia are deep-seated. They date from our downfall in the 17th century. Since that time Bohemia has been cloven to death by Hapsburgs. Foiled in their crime to exterminate us as a race, the Hapsburgs have missed no opportunity since 1621 to strip us one by one of our constitutional liberties. Hatred bears hatred and consequently every Bohemian peasant regards the Hapsburgs as the arch-enemies of his country. How the present emperor loves his Bohemian subjects, the following incidents will show. During certain riots which occurred early in the sixties Count Arrach went down to Vienna to assure the emperor that Bohemian nationalists had nothing to do with the riots and that they were organized by strikers who worked for starvation wages. Before he could finish his explanation, the emperor said to him angrily, "I want to hear nothing of these Bohemian hoodlums." On another occasion, when Clam-Martinic was pleading the cause of Bohemians at a private audience, the emperor turned his back toward him and looked indifferently out of a window.

Francis Joseph is the bane of the Bohemian people, he is the cause of all their recent misfortunes, and as long as he lives or reigns they cannot hope to recover their rights.

Francis Joseph has deprived the people of the liberties which were granted them by his uncle, Ferdinand.

He has given constitutions to abrogate them. He has made pledges to his people in the hour of need, and when his people helped him, he disregarded. He has increased the army of office-holders and organized the gendarmes to spy and harass the people. He has meddled with European affairs without cause, arranging the progress of his subjects at every step.

He has increased the public debt enormously by useless wars. He has always chosen for counselors the most inveterate enemies of the Bohemian commonwealth, like Bach, Schmerling, Mазery, &c.

Oppressor of all nations, he especially persecuted the Bohemian people. One of our greatest populists, Charles Havlicek, was hounded to death by him, scores of patriots, whose only crime consisted in loving their ungrateful country too well, were imprisoned, and those remaining at liberty were placed under police espionage. To pass for a Bohemian amounted to treason at one time. To publish Bohemian books was prohibited. During the reign of Francis Joseph our children were being Germanized, our youth were taught to despise their ancestors.

"Pay and be silent!" that is the motto of the reigning monarch.

For many decades the internal affairs of Austria have been in a terrible state of anarchy. One nationality is arrayed against the other in deadly combat—the Magyars harassing the Slovaks, Croats and Roumenians, the Germans fighting the Bohemians—and to what purpose?

An impartial judge of Austrian affairs would have to confess, unhesitatingly, that Francis Joseph, in the first place is to blame for this chaos and anarchy. If he were a man of judgment and force, instead of being the weakling he is he would have seen by this time that federation is the only salvation of Austria; that the country is doomed to be a prey to strife and contentions unless the just claims of all the nationalities inhabiting his monarchy, are satisfied; that peace and happiness of subjects cannot be won at the point of bayonets, by muzzling the public press and speech, suspending trial by jury and placing the people under martial law—on it can only be secured through wise and beneficent ruling.

Not before this is done will there be peace or happiness in the Austrian dominions. Bayonets may cow down the Young Czechs in 1893 but "some other Czechs" will take place years hence, and with a louder voice will demand the same inalienable rights, the same liberties, which were demanded by their predecessors.
