

CARDINAL ANTONELLI.

The Great Papal Statesman as He Appeared to a Painter. Rudolph Lehmann's visit to Rome in 1857 led to the painter's introduction to the great papal statesman, Cardinal Antonelli. He says: Before me sat that execrated statesman, "the best hated man in Rome," in the most affable of moods. His bronzed and somewhat oriental features were certainly far from handsome, but they were full of character, energy, and, according to some, cruelty, with the large, dark, piercing eyes overshadowed by a heavy brow, the strong aquiline nose and the full sensual lips. He was in a talkative mood and spoke freely of the difficulties that beset his onerous ministry, of the position of the papacy becoming daily more threatened through the ever increasing energy of its wicked enemies, or what he called "the modern spirits." "But," he added, "history teaches us that it has always triumphed in the long run, and it will do so now." He also told me that the worldly interests of the brothers Antonelli had never been separated; that they possessed all their worldly goods in common, one brother being director of the Banca Romana; one, the Conte Gregorio, taking care of their vast possessions in the Pontine marshes, a third being syndac of Rome and the youngest being employed in diplomatic missions by the secretary of state.

During a short rest he showed me, with evident pride, over his elegant apartment, furnished with all the latest modern comforts. But the crowning climax was the bedroom, combining with the solemnity and mystery of the abode of a prince of the church all the luxuries of the boudoir of a petite maitresse. The walls, the curtains, as well as the hangings round the spacious four poster, were of the heaviest crimson damask, looped up with enormous tassels.—Boston Herald.

Life in Japan. "It is a curious, but accepted truth," comments the wife of a naval officer who has resided a number of years in Japan, "that Americans, as a class, do not long stand up against Japan life. There is something in the air, or something lacking in it, which is peculiarly trying to us. So many naval officers serving a three or six years' duty there have come home with an incurable complaint that it is common talk in the service. Two admirals have died of excess of the liver after several years' residence there, and other officers have had their health seriously impaired under similar conditions. I never was seriously sick in my life till I got out to the island empire, and throughout my whole stay I fought something. The English residents do not seem to suffer as we do, which is also a commented upon fact."—New York Times.

SENSATIONAL GOLF STORY.

Hoffman, the Nebraska Survivor, Makes Serious Charges. CLEVELAND, O., Feb. 15.—C. A. Hoffman, the Grand Island, Neb., survivor of the Elbe disaster, who arrived here yesterday, visited the county commissioner's office today in company with Commissioner John Vevea and both men were immediately surrounded by a deeply interested crowd. In conversation with a reporter Mr. Hoffman made a sensational statement, signed by Eugene Schlegel, one of the three male passengers who escaped from the Elbe. Mr. Schlegel swears that about 6 o'clock on the day of the shipwreck he saw a uniformed officer of the Elbe take Hoffman's son from a lifeboat, in which he was placed by his father. The boy was placed on the deck of the vessel and went down with it. Mr. Schlegel made oath that he believes that the officer who took the boy out of the boat was A. Neussel, chief engineer of the steamer. Schlegel charges Neussel with having murdered the boy.

Asked as to whether he intended to bring suit for damages against the North German Lloyd company, Mr. Hoffman said he could not decide the matter until he had seen his attorney. "As soon as I arrive home," he said, "I will go before an attorney and make out a deposition setting forth all I know about the accident and the conduct of the officers and crew."

ADRY'S TESTIMONY CORROBORATED.

Prosecution in the Hayward Case Winds Up With a Knock Out Blow. MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 15.—The state in winding up its case of murder against Harry Hayward today delivered a body blow which staggered the defense. The first witness introduced this morning was none other than Peter Vallie, the hackman to whom Harry had spoken to Adry as being willing to assist in the proposed crime. Vallie's testimony was most damaging to the defense, as it corroborated in a strong way one portion of Adry Hayward's remarkable story and thus rendered thoroughly untenable the defense's pet theory as to Adry's sanity. Vallie testified that Harry Hayward had approached him with questions as to whether he had ever "done anything" and if so whether his conscience had bothered him. Hayward had later asked Vallie whether he would drive a hack into Lake Calhoun and let the occupant drown for a sum of money.

"I told him I was no swimmer," said Vallie, "and that was about the end of it."

The state has rested its case. With all that mass of damaging evidence against him the defendant himself was apparently undismayed. Not so his attorneys. They appeared worried and held a conference as to what to put up as a defense.

TEXAS FEVER LINE EXTENDED.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—In accordance with the act of congress of May 29, 1894, the secretary of agriculture has issued to "managers and superintendents of railroads and transportation companies of the United States, stockmen and others" the usual regulations concerning cattle transportation to be in force from Feb. 15 to Dec. 1 next. The principal difference between the regulations and those of last year lies in the fact that the Texas fever line, as it has been called, has been extended westward to the Pacific coast.

AS WE SEE THINGS.

INFLUENCE OF THE INNER LIFE ON THE EXTERNAL WORLD.

How an Individual or a Scene May Have an Entirely Different Appearance to Two Persons—Happiness and Sorrow Made by "arselves."

There have been philosophers who declared that the earth on which we stand and the stars on which we gaze have no real existence, but are merely the outcomes of our inner selves. Perhaps the best answer to this is that the mind itself, at least that of most people, refuses to receive the idea. The difference between the me and the not me is not sharply defined in the inner consciousness to permit Bishop Berkeley's notion from taking root within us.

Yet we cannot afford to overlook the germ of truth which this idea contains. Though not literally the creation of our thought, the outer world is to each one of us largely that which we make it. Nature herself, in all her varied scenes, whatever she may be in reality, shows herself to us in the light which we throw upon her. One man looks at a landscape and sees land and water, grass and trees, hills and plains, and nothing more. Another, a farmer, sees the growing crops, the fallow land, the noxious weeds, the prospect for future tillage and the obstacles to be overcome. Another, with a painter's eye, sees every variety of form and color, proportion and perspective, harmony and contrast, beauty and sublimity. To the melancholy man all is tinged with gloom—a leaden pall covers even the gayest scenes—while to the joyous everything seems bright and glad, and even the dreariest of November days only suggests the radiant sunlight that is sure later on to struggle through the clouds.

So with the sights of a city. For each of us as they take on the aspect of our own mental condition. How differently they impress the citizen who has spent his life among them from the foreigner who views them for the first time! What a different message the stately and magnificent buildings bear to the absorbed man of business and to the architect who appreciates every detail of their construction!

If there is so wide a divergence in the aspect which inanimate things have for us, the difference is still greater in the way we regard the men and women by whom we are surrounded. Character is a complex thing, difficult to detect, impossible to fathom, yet we presumptuously venture to gauge and pronounce upon it with the smallest modicum of knowledge. It is curious to notice how differently the same person will impress various individuals. His friend will perhaps see no fault in him, his enemy no virtue. One will put faith in him; another will suspect his every action. One will deem him cold hearted; another will think him affectionate and kind. It must be that their own personalities are reflected in him, and that to a certain extent he does thus become for a time, while under their influence, what they suppose him to be always. It is certainly true that the good and gentle find far more goodness and gentleness in the world than those who are deficient in such qualities. It is the selfish man who is the keenest to detect selfishness in others; it is the overbearing who complain most of the arrogance and pride with which they are met, and the unjust who murmur at the injustice they receive. On the other hand, the loving and sympathetic discover love and sympathy everywhere; the noble and true bring to light nobility and truth which might otherwise be hidden. Thus to a large extent we develop the character of those we meet. By a subtle magnetism we draw like to like and evolve out of other personalities the characteristics of our own.

Even the outward circumstances of life are largely what we ourselves make them. We are accustomed to consider prosperity a blessing and adversity a curse, but quite frequently they change places. It is the spirit in which they are received that determines their result. The rich and self indulgent man, surrounded by luxury and opportunity, may be far less happy than his poorer neighbor who brings industry, fidelity and generosity into constant exercise. The same privileges that raise one young man to honor and usefulness are a snare and temptation to another. The same recreation that invigorates one enfeebles another. The same sorrow that softens one and leads him out of self to works of kindness and helpfulness prostrates another and renders him valueless. It is that which is within a man that so acts upon the externals of life as to decide their results to him, and through him to others.

If this be so, then happiness or wretchedness is largely in our power, and most of our complaints only bear witness to our own remissness. We may rightly recognize the futility of struggling against outward events which we cannot control, but we can always bring to bear upon them such a spirit and influence as shall turn evil into good and bitter into sweet.—Philadelphian Ledger.

A Startling Announcement.

An English literary man who was on the verge of bringing out a book at the Pitt Press ordered his proofs to be sent to him at a house where he was engaged to dine out, intending to look them over in the half hour after dinner. The printer's boy however, was late in bringing them, and the gentlemen had already rejoined the ladies in the drawing room when the company was electrified by hearing the sonorous voice of the butler announcing, "The devil from the Pitt has come for Mr. Jones!"—San Francisco Argonaut.
