As to Washington:—Speaking with a cure all liver ills, sick headcertain amount of reserve, it is generally true that our understanding of an event in its relation to other events is increased by distance. For instance, let me suggest that we understand the voyage of the "Mayflower," the settle-ment of Massachusetts, the expulsion of Roger Williams, the migrations westward from Virginia and New England-all these things, in their relation to other events in their effect, much better than did the actual participants. So also of men. In the case of really great ones it needs a century almost to measure their works to strip them of any false glamour of praise or gloom of blame. As with a general in the hands of his valet, those in constant association with the great feel too often that clothes and chance make the hero; or if they do see greatness in their admired one, they fail to see any detrac-tions from his loftiness, for both love and friendship are blind—(many of us can thank fortune for that, or else we had been reckoned as naught long ago.)

By reason of the investigation of the later students of Washington, we are now ready to concede that many of the violent assaults upon his character and purpose-made during his lifetime and shortly thereafter-were argenerous and unfounded. Thanks also to the candor of modern historians, we can now see further that he was by no means a demi-god striding along on lofty mountain tops, but a humble unassuming, ordinary citizen, whose de-votion for his cause made up full often for the scampering, runaway fighting that he was obliged to resort to. We see that few of the startling victories of the Revolution were gained by him. We also see that his Fabian policy; here one day and away the next; but scarcely ever venturing on a pitched battle, wore out the enemy by ignominious floun-derings rather than by armed resist-ance. His greatness was more in his noble courage in clinging to an endan-gered cause, in the face of the mutter-ings and discontent of many of the influential people, who, like the loyalists of Cuba at the present moment, were a most serious influence to combat.

Washington, the Reconstructor, is far greater to the mind of a man of peace like myself, than Washington, the Revolutionist. Then his calm mind, freed from the blood and bustle of the battle field, rose to its highest. Made a commander of the men by the trumpet call of patriotic duty; he remained a commander of men after the turmoil was over. His genius was in the selection of advisers, in the judicial cast of mind that weighed the pro and con most carefully, in the power—shared by many of his compeers—of seeing into the future, so that we who are now almost ready to turn the corner of another century, are forced to marvel at the foresight of a group of men, who so admirably laid the foundations of a western empire that the strain of an unexampled expansion has never yet succeeded in rending asunder the work they cemented with their wounds, their lives and their sacred honor.

More glorious than war are victories The sweeping out or wear ing out of enemies, remarkable though it appears when we look back at the miserable equipments and the inner dissensions to be contended with: these would have availed us no more than a successful revolution seems to avail a Central American republic, had the garnering of the fruits of the victory been left unattended to. These patri-otic statesmen planted our glorious tree of freedom. It was planted once and once only (please God, never to be uprooted!) but its fruits are perennial and are still ours to gather. We are not called on to nourish that tree with our dead bodies, but our living ones must be devoted to its service. To a jealous regard for all that it represents we are summoned—each one of us that names the name of "American." They who gather from every tribe and nation under Heaven; joining hands with us in devotion to freedom—all from the least to the greatest—may serve the cause that Washington and the Revolutionists brought into our history. For-saking the strain of our necks, looking backward to the beginnings, let us look around and forward. Let us grapple with evil, wherever we find either the designs of wealth or the worse crime of indifference threatening our heritage; and let us further understand that sincere watchfulness is the only way to insure for our children's children, an I theirs after them a government that is in a decided measure based upon the will of the people.

The lives of great men, when they fail to stir us ordinary ones, are waste and unprofitable, so far as we are con-cerned. But in every noble resolve that a great life inspires in a lesser life there is the living again of the dead. May the dogged devotion of Washington be resurrected by each of us in these terrible times, when men would seek to confuse us by loud warlike noises that almost drown the gentle pipings of peace.

The wid'ning river that toward the sea Resistless runs, still swelling constantly. Does not derive its force and fullest flow From any sudden sweep of storm or snow; But draws its certain strength from constant wells,
Cradled on stainless heights where stillness
dwells,

So doth Columbia's ever swelling tide
Of lusty life and freedom, spreading wide,
Take inspiration from that noble force.
George Washington, and shape its steady course
From him whose tireless soul stood firm for peace,
And planned and fought only that war might

Let us then rightly judge our great ideal,
And love his tender thought for public weal;
Leaving the mighty warrior to inspire
Only when threatened hearts our spirits fire;
Mindful that floods, though they may purify,
Leave in their wasting train dark dregs of misery.
