THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

The Most Enthusiastic and Peaceable Convention Ever Held.—Not One Dissenting Voice to the Nominations.

For President—
WILLIAM MCKINLEY.
For Vice President—
THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

PHILADELPHIA, June 21st.—President McKinley was unanimously re-nominated for president of the United States by the republican national convention at 1:48 p.m., and an hour and ten minutes later Governor Theodore Roosevelt of New York was unanimously selected to stand beside him in the coming battle.

The scenes attending the selections were tumultuous. Such unanimous demonstrations in honor of the nominees of a national convention have never been equalled, perhaps, in the history of politics in this country. It was a love feast, a jubilee, a ratification meeting.

The great hall became quiet as Senator Lodge, standing before 15,000 eager faces, gavel in hand, announced that nominations for president of the United States were in order. The reading clerk advanced to the front of the platform. He was about to call the roll of states for the presentation of candidates. When Alabama was called a thin, red-whiskered delegate from that state arose and surrendered the first right to speak to Ohio. A flutter of handkerchiefs filled the air and a cheer went up from the delegates in the pit as Senator Foraker of Ohio, the idol of the militant republicanism, strode to the platform.

When quiet was restored he began to speak. It was not yet noon but the sun was blazing through the roof, shooting his darts and arrows into all parts of the hall. With resonant ringing voice and graceful gesture, Foraker stilled the noise. Even the pages and attendants crouched down as they gazed at the orator.

When he said his candidate was the first choice of every man who desired republican success in November the roar was like the rush of a heavy sea through a rocky cavern. The orator was silenced by his own words. His audience was thrilled. They sat like men under a spell. He dropped a word here, a word there, like sparks upon a sun-dried stubble, and when he concluded by placing McKinley in nomination, not in behalf of Ohio, but of all the states and territories, a clap of thunder shook the building. The nomination was immediately seconded by Roosevelt of New York, Thurston of Nebraska, Yerxes of Kentucky and Gov. Mount of Indiana. The roll call showed 330 votes for McKinley out of 330 votes in the convention.

After quiet had been restored Chairman Lodge announced nominations for vice president were in order.

Again the name of Alabama was called and again Alabama yielded the floor, this time to Iowa, and Col. Lafe Young of Iowa in a very forcible speech placed before the convention the name of Theodore Roosevelt of New York for vice president. The nomination was seconded from every quarter of the hall and after quiet was restored a roll call was ordered which resulted in 929 votes for Roosevelt, there being one vote lacking that being his own vote in the New York delegation.

This closed the work and at 2:14 the republican national convention of 1900 adjourned.

ALMOST FORGOTTEN. Incidents of Every Day Life Which Very Few People Stop to Think About on Account of Their Littleness.

There is one thing that is not this week almost forgotten.—That is the sidewalk which has been built in front of the Noah's ark.—We invite the public to come over and walk on the good side of the street.—This sidewalk is now the joy of the babies because mamma can now trundle the baby along without taking chances of breaking the baby's neck.—It will add materially to the business done on this side of the street.—The CHIEF is not taking any credit for the advocacy of this improvement.—There is enough glory in knowing that the walk is there.—Our greatest joy would be to see the council frame an ordinance under the law which will condemn this building and convert it into the only thing for which it is valuable—kindling wood.—As the Fourth of July approaches the scramble to secure a ticket to the convention at Kansas City is great.—A quiet little Fourth right here at home is preferable.—It will save that tired feeling, that headache and that wish to be alone the next day.—It will save that infinitesimal feeling that some people here who think they are "big people" will undergo when they meet and see numbers of really great men.—Politics will begin to warm up shortly.

—In fact they have already begun to assume the warming up process.—The man who merely looks on and witnesses the absurdity of many political discussions may be looked upon as a nonentity but he will have the satisfaction of not running up against a black eye or the eternal enmity of his best friend.—If we had the genius of Bixby of the State Journal we would indite a poem on the rose, not in the spirit that John M. Thurston did, of love and tenderness, but we would write of it as seen by the foreman of the CHIEF in his dreams on last Saturday morning.—"e would not write of the rose in its beauty and sweetness.—We would write of it as a dragon and of the bush that bore it as unsightly and covered with thorns resembling the weapon which the ladies use when they say "gee up" in their endeavors to make the family horse go faster.—We would write of an irate woman who stood at the well near midnight with one of these thorns in her hand.—But we have not Bixby's genius and will have to let this bad dream of the rose remain written on the memory of the foreman.

A Pleasant Surprise.
Mrs. Graham gave her mother, Mrs. Dr. Rockwell, a very pleasant surprise party last Monday night. She had planned it and given out the invitations, then on the evening stated they went out riding. When they came back Dr. Rockwell said, "Let us get a dish of ice cream before we go up to our rooms." "Oh! no," said Mrs. Graham. "We will get that later." At the door of her rooms the Dr. saw a light from the transom and said, "Oh! there is some one here," thinking it was her other daughter. But when she opened the door and saw the room filled with ladies all eager to welcome her, her surprise showed in looks and words. The ladies were very pleasantly entertained with games and puzzles, Mrs. Graham introducing the famous Dewey puzzle. At a late hour all were invited to go down to Bense's and see what they could find to eat. That famous caterer served them with his delicious ice cream and some very fine cake, after which they wended their way home, happy, lighted through the darkness by the lantern of a philanthropist. The ladies present represented three societies of which Dr. Rockwell is a member. There were six members of the Eastern Star, six of the M. E. Ladies Aid Society and five members of the Womens Relief Corps.
