

Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper.

RAISIN MECHANICAL FEAT RECENTLY PERFORMED AT THE MASONIC TEMPLE IN CHICAGO.

A short time ago, owing to natural causes, the alley east of the Masonic Temple building, nearly 300 feet in length, sank 12 inches. The sinking was gradual, but when it ended the alley was resting upon the upper parts of the boiler and furnace mechanisms of the building which occupy the space underneath the alley's area. Fortunately for the hundreds of teamsters and truckmen who use the alley daily the sinking had been even, without a crack or caving in. The earth formation carried the asphalt paving down with it as regularly as if the sinking had been regulated by man instead of nature, says the Chicago Record-Herald.

The problem presented to Capt. Williams, superintendent of the Masonic Temple, was of either removing the old alley and constructing a new and artificial one or of attempting to raise the old one back to its old level without cracking or injuring it. He decided on the latter course. A series of jacks were worked under the sunken passage-way. They upheld a framework of wood, which extended to all parts of the alley. Workmen then began to slowly screw up the jacks. This screwing up process began at two o'clock on a Sunday morning and was finished at one o'clock that afternoon. During that time wagons loaded with coal and other teams drove through the alley, not noticing that anything extraordinary was going on.

The entire mass of asphalt and earth was finally brought back to its true level without cracking or displacement of any kind, and then given such a new foundation that it can never sink again. The expense was over $1,000. It has been possible for some time to raise a brick house and move it away without injury to its parts. Stone buildings and stores have also been raised and moved, but Capt. Williams believes that this is the first time an alley has ever been raised by jacks without interruption of traffic or injury to the surface of the same.

THE DOUGHNUT COIN.

No Such Piece of Money Has Been Ordered to Be Issued.

Widely Circulated Story of a Three-Cent Coin with a Hole in It Is Entirely Without Foundation.

A curious story has been appearing in many newspapers that a strange new three-cent coin with a hole in the middle is about to be issued by the government.

This has been called the "doughnut coin." The Washington correspondent of the New York World recently asked Director of the Mint Roberts about it.

Mr. Roberts says there is absolutely no truth in the report; that no new coin can be made at the mint unless ordered by a special act of congress, and no such act has been passed.

But so widely has the story about the "doughnut coin" been printed that doubtless many people are daily expecting to get them in change and give them to their babies to string like beads.

According to the interesting but misleading stories that have been printed, the coin would be composed of nickel.

The theory of this idea was that the hurried handler will be enabled to at once detect the value of the coin by his sense of feeling. Some such safeguard was said to be necessary for the reason that it is very nearly the size and weight of the present five-cent nickel. The size of the hole in the proposed new coin was to be of ample magnitude to make it simply a ring of metal and to occupy about one-half of the entire diameter.

The new coin, it was said, was to do away with one of the great difficulties which beset the handlers of small silver coins when metal money first came into use after the circulation of paper collateral. The coins which reached the hands of children and some classes in the more remote regions treated them as curiosities and as prizes. To insure their safekeeping it was a favorite method to punch a hole in them, and, passing a string through the aperture, tie the whole securely about the neck.

This practice, of course, destroyed the circulation value of the coins, and dealers who subsequently took them in were obliged to stand the loss. So general became the practice that a fixed scale was finally arranged for deduction for punched dimes, nickels and other pieces. The new piece could be strung without injuring it.

In the west and southwest the one-cent piece was slower in coming into favor than in the east, and the coinage of the new piece was supposed to be to meet a demand for which the five-cent piece is too large and the one-cent piece too small.

The five-cent nickel piece has been in use for over 30 years, having been first coined during the latter part of the civil war or just after that. Before that time for many years the only small change in circulation was made of paper 5-cent, 10-cent, 15-cent and 25-cent notes, being issued by the government. The subsidiary notes also included a 30-cent piece, and all of these were popularly known as "shin plasters." The necessity for them arose from the disappearance of metal money during the war period.

OPEN MART FOR PLUNDERERS.

Thieves Sell What They Steal in Mexico with Knowledge of Public and Police.

In the City of Mexico there is a place known as the thieves' market that has a large patronage, some of it coming from presumably respectable and honest citizens. That such a place should exist in any city appears almost incredible, yet it conducts business with the full knowledge of the police, and with that of every resident of the city. What is more, says the Chicago Chronicle, it is directly opposite one side of the national palace, the winter home of President Diaz, and is only one block from the offices of the city administration. And it is no small establishment, either, such as might be overlooked, for it occupies a court as large as a city block, and is crowded from morning to night with persons who are looking for bargains, and know that the place to find them is in the "thieves' market."

Naturally, the thieves themselves do not act as the salesmen for the stolen goods. They keep out of sight, and either dispose of the stolen goods for a lump sum to the hucksters or allow them to sell for them on commission. In either case the thief gets little, the dealer is content with a small profit and the goods, whose original owner is unknown, can be obtained for a tenth of their value.

To the visitors to Mexico the market is well worth a visit, even if scruples of conscience should prevent the purchase of what are admittedly stolen goods. There will be no trouble in finding the place.

Any policeman or any citizen will direct you to it. It is just east of the Zoocalo—the park of the people and across the street from the south front of the national palace. Even with this knowledge you might pass by a high wall, such as surrounds many of the private homes. But at the end of the wall is a huge gate, large enough to drive a loaded truck through. Passing through this gate you enter the market. It is a big, open court, stone-paved and surrounded by buildings on three sides and by the wall on the fourth. Scattered over this, arranged in streets, are the booths, where the stolen goods are displayed for sale. These stalls are crude affairs. Usually they consist of a few boards, laid on supports which raise them two or three feet off the ground. Sometimes the goods are piled up carelessly on the stone pavement. But over each of them is the awning of coarse cotton cloth, supported on rough poles, which the Mexican huckster invariably has.

Crockery, tinware, cutlery and cooking utensils form one of the staples of the market. There is always a demand for these among the poor, and so the ratero gathers them in wherever and whenever he can, knowing that they will find a ready sale. And it is not only the poor who buy these things. One restaurant proprietor in the city whose place is one of the largest there, admitted that nearly all his table knives and forks as well as the pots and pans used in the kitchen were bought by him in the thieves' market. He is a regular visitor to the place, and not long ago he picked up a bargain in the shape of a young pig, which some enterprising thief had gathered in.

How long the thieves' market will exist as it does now there is none to tell. It is an old institution, and no one thinks of interfering with it. Now and then a stranger, hearing of its nature for the first time, wonders how the city authorities can allow it to do business as it does. But the native Mexican and the acclimated foreigner accept it as it is, and instead of objecting to it find it a very convenient place in which to pick up a bargain and save themselves considerable money.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J.
