FABLES.

From the Kansas Mail and Breeze.

On one occasion a coyote who had had trouble with his own crowd fell in with a stray dog who had also disagreed with the rest of the dogs in his neighborhood. After a little conversation the dog and wolf decided to call a convention of all the dissatisfied animals, birds and beasts for the purpose of organizing a new party. When the call was sent out it met with hearty response. On the day set for the convention there was a tremendous gathering out in an abandoned field. There were several horses there who had labored under the impression that they were runners or trotters, but who had never been fast enough to get anywhere when they were put on the track and having been ruled off were hot about the lack of appreciation of their ability. There were dogs there who had made failures as watch dogs and also had demonstrated that they were no good as either bird dogs or chasers of rabbits. There were cats who thought they had talent for music, but had been repeatedly driven off the back yard fence and forced to make a get away in order to avoid brickbats and other missiles of a destructive character. There were rats who had been forced to abandon cribs of corn, hens who were hot because they hadn't been allowed to sit when they wanted to; skunks who complained because they were not admitted into society; mules who had a kick coming because the general public objected to their bray; wolves who claimed that a combine had been formed against them by the keepers of sheep to crowd them entirely out of the mutton business; foxes who were dissatisfied because the chicken houses were being made so tight and the roosts so high that they (the foxes) were being ruined by this conspiracy against their rights. Among all the crowd that gathered there was not one that did not have a roar about something.

When the dog, who had been the chief promoter of the movement, called the crowd to order he announced that it had been felt for a long time that they were getting the worst of it in the old organization to which they belonged and that it has been decided to form an organization of the dissatisfied. He then asked what animal or bird the assembly would have for chairman, and right there trouble commenced. The mule insisted that he ought to be the presiding officer on account of his far-reaching and melodious voice. Upon hearing this statement the horse broke into a derisive laugh. The coyote suggested that he was the best speaker in the crowd and if the delegates had any sense at all they would elect him chairman by a unanimous voice. A grouchy bulldog insisted that he was the only thing there that was able to keep order, and an eagle who had a sore wing even yet on account of a shot that he got while carrying off a young lamb, declared that he was the only bird fitted by nature and experience for running a meeting of that kind.

As the time wore on the trouble got hotter. A sheep made a charge that the eagle had robbed her of one of her children and demanded an investigation; the coyote grabbed the sitting hen when the rest were not looking, but was pursued by the fox, who insisted that unless the coyote would divide he would expose him. The cat watched his chance and made a jump for the rat, when the bull dog mixed in and killed both. The skunk looked over the scrapping crowd with an evil grin and then remarked: "I think it is time for me to contribute a (s) cents to this collection;" the eagle with a scream made a dive for a small bird and the assembly broke up in a row that was the warmest that had ever been seen in that neck of the woods.

Moral: It is unreasonable to suppose that people who can't get along with their own families can get along with each other. A lot of kickers will never make a successful organization.

If you want a cheap harness remember I can furnish it as cheap as any one.—JOS. FEGEL.

The man on the stage who does the trick of escaping from firmly tied ropes, submits to the bonds with a smile. He knows he can get out of the ropes that are being knotted. Put the same man in the woods and let Indian captors bind him to a tree for torture and he would struggle to the last against the bonds.

When the stomach is diseased there are bonds being woven every hour about the organs dependent on the stomach—heart, lungs, liver, kidneys, etc. The folly of mankind is to passively submit to the fastening of these bonds with no effort to escape until the pain they cause arouses fear.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It cures diseases of heart, liver, lungs, kidneys and other organs, when these diseases, as is often the case, have their origin in the diseased stomach.

"For a long time I was suffering and was hardly able to get about," writes Mr. Andrew J. Jennings, of Thomas, Tucker Co., W. Va., Box 194. "I was bothered with kidney trouble and my whole system was out of order; had no appetite. A friend of mine told me to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I did so and the first bottle restored my appetite. I took six bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and some of the 'Pleasant Pellets' and feel like a new person."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cleanse the clogged system from impurities.
