Charles H. Kaley has very proud bearing and important look these days, almost to be walking on air. When he gets back to earth again, just congratulate him, for he has a fine, big boy at his house, who arrived there last Monday morning.

During the storm last Tuesday evening lightning struck the house in which Mrs. Jackson and Mrs. Walker are living. The chimney was nearly demolished, a large hole was torn in the roof and the plaster was torn off in nearly every room. Happily, no one was injured.

R. B. Kummer, proprietor of the Red Cloud roller mills, has made preparations to erect a 10,000 bushel elevator, as an addition to his plant. Mr. Kummer has been very successful in his milling business here, and this additional equipment will greatly facilitate the handling of the immense new crop of wheat.

Episcopal services: Every first Sunday in the month: Morning, at 10:30, litany, holy communion; evening, at 7:30, evening prayer and sermon. Every third Sunday in the month: Morning, 10:30, morning prayer and sermon; evening, 7:30, evening prayer and sermon. Everybody welcomed. E. U. Brun, rector.

Tuere has probably never been a time in this county when crops and crop conditions were as good as they are today. Finer wheat and corn, or, for that matter, any kind of vegetation, can seldom be seen. Farmers are feeling good and are also very busy just at present. There are a number of fields of wheat in this county which it is thought will yield 50 bushels to the acre, which is not so bad for any country.

A donkey stepped into a store, says the Belleville Freeman, and the owner approached the beast and asked: "What are you doing here? You know this is no place for a donkey." "I am here," said the donkey, "because I saw your advertisement on a fence that surrounds my pasture. I know, you too, must be a donkey, or you would place the advertisement in a newspaper, where it would be read by the people, not donkeys. I thought I would be neighborly and make you a fraternal call."

FROM ALBERTA, CANADA.

RED DEER, ALBERTA, N. W. T.

"God drew the toiler's eye Across a land that promised fair, And, returned to the smiling sky, Its bosom He laid bare."

A three months' residence in Alberta, N. W. T., makes me think I have found the country that suits me, and the country where a poor man can make a living, especially if he has plenty of money.

Nowhere in the wide world is the grass more luxuriant, the trees greener, or the promise of crops better, than in central and northern Alberta, 200 miles north of the Montana line. The air is redolent with the perfume of the balm of Gilead trees, spruce trees, the fragrant pussy willows and saskatoon bushes, besides thousands of wild flowers of a score of different varieties the most beautiful and fragrant of which is the wild rose, which blooms and thrives here in all its pristine glory, doubled and many hued, as James Whitcomb Riley says:

"I like 'em cause they kind o' Sort o' make a feller like 'em, An I tell you where I find a Bunch out where the sun kin strike 'em."

It allus sets me thinkin' O' the ones that used to grow, An' peepin' thro' the chinkin' O' the cabin, don't you know."

The weather here is mostly of the delightful kind. The wind listeth not, consequently it bloweth not; a man from Nebraska feels like he might be in a new world. A man can actually light a pipe here at any time without a bit of Irish blood in him; neither does he have to have a cover on the pipe or lay a stone on top of the tobacco to keep it in the bowl.

Rain! Yes, it rains; not only when you want it to, but oftimes when you don't want it to; in fact it rains here like some of the doctors in Nebraska take life—easy. However, we have no cyclones, no blizzards, no hot winds and no volcanic eruptions, but I can't say no mud; but mud means crops, and, as the little boy said about the preacher, "that's what we are after."

The roads are bad—just now they are "badder"—but the time will come soon when this feature of Alberta will be done away with considerably, as on the thousands of miles of roads running in every direction scarcely a dollar has been expended to make them better. However the government is thinking strongly of appropriating a very large sum, probably a million dollars, to be expended on roads and bridges in central and northern Alberta, which, together with the road tax on land, ought to put us in pretty fair shape.

The mosquitos? Yes, they are here, as Bret Harte said, "of which I am free to admit," but so far they don't seem to be of the cross kind, and I have had only one or two bites this spring. They are not nearly as large, nor as vicious, nor as numerous as I have seen them in the lake country of northwestern Nebraska or on the Cimarron river in Oklahoma. In fact we need to know what they were like in Nebraska in the early days. I haven't seen any here that were over eight inches long, and the stories Alec Phillips and D. B. Spanogle told me before I came up about their carrying off children or taking pieces out of people and sitting on the fence to eat them seem to be purely mythical.

Speaking of crops here, I will tell you of a neighbor of mine, a worthy Briton named Trifail, who raised last year 71 good loads of green oats off of 10 acres of land, the oats sowed in June. Not so bad, is it?

The British government recently bought of an elevator firm on this road, to be loaded here and at two other points north of here, 500 cars of oats to be shipped to England and South Africa for cavalry horses, and every bushel must test 42 pounds or better. They wanted more, but the country was unable to furnish them, having exhausted the supply. Alberta oats bring the highest price of any on the eastern markets.

We have an abundance of sunshine this month and next (when it does shine), as in this latitude the sun rises on the 21st of June at twenty minutes past 4 and sets at 9 o'clock, giving us nearly seventeen hours of sunshine. At present we can see to read any kind of print easy enough by daylight after 10 o'clock at night, and just how early in the morning I am unable to state—I understand at half past 2 in the morning. It will be different in the winter.

Prices on everything vary in comparison with Nebraska. Clothing is not high, however, and the necessities of life, such as flour, sugar, tea, canned goods and whisky, are nearly the same as there. Coffee is much higher, especially the roasted coffee.

Game and fish are quite plentiful. Thousands of prairie chickens and partridges and wild ducks in abundance. The ducks nest here and the ponds and lakes are covered with the little fellows now. In the fish line—not on the line—are nice salmon, pike, pickerel and perch, as well as many other kinds. This is the closed season now for both hunting and fishing, but a little later one can go to some of the many lakes and buy nice dressed fish weighing about two pounds for five or six cents apiece, which is cheaper than catching them, but not so funny unless there are too many mosquitos.

West of here fifty to eighty miles is plenty of big game—bear, deer and occasionally moose.

Names and terms of things differ somewhat from those in use in Nebraska. A spring wagon is invariably called a democrat. I attended a sale a short time ago during which the auctioneer sold a "democrat." As he was about to knock it off he said: "Only seven dollars for this democrat—going or seven dollars! Why, gentleman, a democrat like that for seven dollars—it's a shame! Sold for seven dollars! Just then two men came around from behind the barn wiping their mouths, and one of them remarked to the other: "Seven dollars for a democrat! Well, well! What would a populist be worth up here?"

Politics, though, are a little on the quiet order here. We had an election on the 24th of May to select a member of the territorial legislature. There were only two candidates, and, of course one of them was defeated. I am not a voter here, but I couldn't help taking sides, though my man was defeated. A Nebraska republican knows how to take defeat, however, and I didn't mind it much.

One of the greatest drawbacks to this country is a fatal horse disease called "swamp fever." It has been very disastrous in the last three years, but seems to be on the wane some now. One man living east of us lost $5,000 worth of horses last year from the disease. I am not afraid of its affecting me that bad, but I dread it, "just the same."

The people here from Webster county are all in good spirits and doing well. Mr. Broomfield has bought a nice farm adjoining the village of Penhold and is improving it very nicely. Mr. Webber yet lives on a rented place three miles east of Red Deer, but will go to his claim some distance east in the fall probably. Lloyd Reigle is with Mr. Broomfield at Penhold, and Clay Orchard is 2,000 feet under the ground in at Michael, British Columbia, where he gets good wages and seems to be satisfied.

I should like to see all the old friends and the alfalfa fields of Webster county once more, but my desire to live there has vanished. Alberta is good enough for me.
