Some of the girls are making a specialty of reciting nonsense rhymes. One of the dream-ers can recite fifty without stopping to think. Here are some of hers: "There was a young lady called Mabel, who stood on her head on the table. She got very red when the gentleman said, 'O, look at the legs on the table'" "There was a young sculptor named Phidias, whose work was so insidious, he carved Aphrodite without any nightie, and we had to take something to stiddy us." "There was a young lady named Anna, who sang in the choir, high soprano. She fell on a chair, and the tenor said, 'There, I've both heard and seen your hosenanna.'"
Last Saturday afternoon at Alma occurred a tragedy which it seems might have been avoided had the officers exercised a little judgment. Mark Coffey, a farmer, was in Alma doing some trading, and after he had transacted his business loaded up on "bug juice." When the time came for starting home Mr. and Mrs. Coffey got in their wagon, and Coffey who was too drunk to be responsible for what he was doing, insisted on driving up and down the street and creating a disturbance. Mrs. Coffey appealed to Sheriff Sheburn to induce her husband to go home, and when the sheriff interfered Coffey became violent, climbed out of his wagon and started for the sheriff with a knife. The sheriff called on Frank Hehe, another farmer, to assist him in quieting Coffey. Coffey then started toward Hehe, who drew a revolver and shot him. Hehe was arrested on a warrant and taken to Republican City, but for fear of mob violence he was afterward brought to Red Cloud. He will be given a preliminary hearing on the 23d before Judge Miller at Alma, and should Mr. Coffey die, will probably be held for manslaughter.

Mysterious Assault.
Last Monday evening Mit Steel, who is employed at Smith's livery barn, was assaulted by some unknown person while returning from a drive to Smith county, Kansas. Steel had taken George Osborn over to the old Tom Ryan place, just across the line in Kansas almost due south from Inavale. It was late in the evening before he started to return home, and the people at the place tried to persuade him to remain over night. He excused himself on the ground that the team had to be back to the barn that night, and started home about half past 6 o'clock. He had proceeded on his way only about a mile and a half and was driving at a brisk trot, when a man suddenly arose from the tall grass along the roadside and dealt him a heavy blow between the eyes with some blunt instrument, cutting a severe gash and rendering him unconscious. Steel was dragged from his buggy and carried to a hole in the embankment of the road, where he was probably left for dead by his assailant. Steel lay on the ground all night and did not recover consciousness until after daylight Tuesday morning, and was so dazed and benumbed by cold and exposure that he was unable to realize what had happened. His hat was missing, but his watch and what little money he had were still on his person. The team was standing a few rods away eating grass by the roadside, and after Steel had gathered himself together he drove into Red Cloud and reported the matter.
As no money or valuables were taken from Steel's person, the motive for the assault seems to have arisen from revenge. Steel is of a "scrappy" disposition and on several occasions has had trouble with parties from that neighborhood, and it is supposed that someone of these took this manner of revenging himself for past grievances. There is no clue, however, which will positively identify the guilty party, though it is said Steel has a pretty good idea who hit him. His wound, while severe, is not dangerous, though it is a wonder he did not freeze to death during the night, as the thermometer registered very near the zero mark next morning. If these assaults and murders in that neighborhood continue, people will soon be afraid to venture out after dark.

wedding was a very quiet home affair, and Rev. William Hauptmann, pastor of the Congregational church, performed the ceremony in the presence of the parents and a few intimate friends of the bride and groom. Both the young people have lived practically all their lives in Red Cloud and are highly esteemed by their host of friends. Mr. Foe holds an important position in the office of the B. & M. train dispatcher at McCook. After the wedding supper, which was served at the home of the bride, the happy young couple left for McCook, where they will make their future home. THE CHIEF joins their many friends in extending congratulations.
