Interstate Reunion.

The interstate reunion is now a piece of history to which many references will be made in the future. Taken on the whole it was the most successful which had been held in this section of the country; because of the crowds which attended it and the manner in which it was conducted through out the entire week Friday Old Settlers Day was the best day of the week. The number of people present Friday is variously estimated at from 8,000 to 15,000. As near as can be ascertained there were more than 4,000 people who got their meals at the restaurants and hotels on Friday. The committees who had the reunion in charge may feel justly proud of their work. There was good speaking every day by brilliant speakers: Gov. Mickey, George W. Rerke, E. J. Burkett, J. L. McBrien, R. D. Sutherland, Congressman Norris, and many others interested the people. Mrs. R. D. Congdon of Pawnee City spoke for the Womans Relief Corp and was loudly applauded.

The most noteworthy address of the entire week was the speech of Judge Lee S. Estelle, of Omaha. The Judge in the spring of 1872 tramped into Red Cloud with Dr. I. W. Tulleys from Harvard, which was then the nearest railroad point. They slept, at night on the sand wrapped in a blanket at Spring Run. After spending two years in the practice of such law as was to be practiced, the young lawyer removed to the eastern part of the state, where his career has been attended with uniform and distinguished success. Still he retains in his memories the affections he made and experiences he underwent during his two or three years residence in this county. More than that, he is the only man competent to address a large audience effectively who lived in the valley during the years 1872 and 1873. Unless we except the Rev. George Hummel. The judge is a speaker of ability, but it is not his eloquence as an orator which makes him peculiarly interesting to the Chief and its readers. He is one of the founders of the Chief and his story of the founding of the first paper in the valley and the purchase and history of the old fashioned press with which it was printed was of so interesting a nature that we desire to give it as nearly as we can, as it fell from the lips of the speaker.

Having earned a little money as assistant secretary of state, a position he attributed to Silas Garber, afterward Governor Garber, he put this with a like amount furnished by W. N. Richardson and Mr. Garber, and with it all started out to purchase a printing outfit.

He found an old Washington hand press in the possession of a Mr. McMurphy of Plattsmouth whose history made a strong appeal to his fancy. It was said to be the press which was used by Elijah P. Lovejoy, the first distinguished martyr in the war of freedom against slavery on American soil. Lovejoy was a minister who undertook to publish a paper in St. Louis in 1836 devoted to cause of abolition. Driven from St. Louis by a mob he established himself across the river at Alton, Illinois. There also a mob attacked him. While asserting his right to advocate the cause of the slave, Lovejoy was shot down in cold blood, and his printing press was attempted to be buried in the Mississippi river. This was in 1837. Afterwards, a younger brother of Elijah Lovejoy, Owen Lovejoy, was elected to Congress, and became by the single-hearted, eloquent persistence with which he denounced slavery, the congressional fore runner of the wave of public sentiment for liberty which was destined to wash slavery from America. This press which the murdered

Lovejoy owned at the time of his murder, was the one purchased by Estelle at Plattsmouth, and by him shipped to Red Cloud. It was hauled from the railroad, then terminating at Junia's, by David Lutz, with an ox team. The oxen becoming frightened on the road ran away broke the wagon and upset its contents of press and type upon the prairie. Lutz, however patiently gathered up all the scattered type, and eventually brought the whole outfit to Red Cloud.
The 1st paper printed in the cellar of a new frame building, M. B. McNitt's, then being erected where Miner's store now stands. The building had not yet been roofed in and a heavy rain storm set in on the night preceding the publication, and filled the cellar. C ntinued on last page.
