There is a worthless young man in this town who has frequently "worked" the business men and others in all sorts of underhand methods, securing money, etc., for prospective base ball games, and using their names to secure money and goods. On two or three occasions he has narrowly missed landing in jail, but sympathy for his parents has thus far saved him. It cannot last much longer, however, and one of these days this boy will find himself looking through prison bars from the wrong side. His strongest hold is "grafting" upon new men who come to town and are not aware of his record, and the last new business man to arrive in our midst was "worked" for $3 in this manner. The next offense in this line will call for the publication of the young man's name and the record of his transactions, so far as they are obtainable.
