Adam Miller and Henry Steifel were visiting at N. E. Harvey's Sunday.

The musical at Mr. Lambert's was only fairly well attended owing to the bad roads and cloudy weather.

On Thursday afternoon occurred one of the most pleasing events of the season. A few of Mrs. Jorgenson's lady friends had planned for her and her husband a great surprise.

Shortly after the dinner hour the people began coming to their home from every direction and apparently from every hill and valley. The good man of the house was in the field raking alfalfa, but, seeing so many teams driving into the yard, thought he had better go in and see what it all meant.

It did not take him long to find out, for when he came to the house he noticed everyone was bringing dishpans and boxes heaped high with something that made a tired farmer feel rather hungry.

Now the smiles began to broaden on this good man's face, for if there is one man that likes good things to eat more than another, it is Mr. Jorgenson.

After the tables had been laden with all the good things the farmers' wives could think of, the good man and his wife were escorted to their new and commodious dwelling, and when seated in the parlor Mr. Gilroy, in the presence of the immense crowd, with a few well chosen and heartfelt remarks presented to them, in behalf of their many friends, the beautiful bedroom suite that had been purchased for them as a token of the esteem in which they were held in the minds of the people.

If one has ever been placed in just such circumstances, he knows well enough how much was meant by Mr. Jorgenson when he could only say "Thank you." After this the guests were seated at the table and supper was served, followed by dessert of ice cream and berries. All enjoyed themselves, and it is needless to say all did justice to themselves here, as elsewhere. As the afternoon wore away and night came on the crowd kept breaking, some going to their homes again, others still coming to enjoy the evening's entertainment, which consisted of music and games. Darkness came on, the storm appeared and, the roads being so very bad in places, some of the people were detained until daylight. It was a time long to be remembered, for all were made to feel they were welcome by the kind-hearted manner in which they were treated by their host and hostess.

A STRENUOUS REMEDY.

How a Servant Tried to Sober Up a Bibulous Diplomat.

The story had reference to a former senator of the United States who was sent to Russia as minister. There were various evidences in the archives of the legation that sobriety was not this gentleman's especial virtue and among them very many copies of notes in which the minister, through the secretary of legation, excused himself from keeping engagements at the foreign office on the ground of "sudden indisposition."

Mr. Prince told me that one day this minister's valet, who was an Irishman, came to the consulate and said: "O'll not stay with his igsillincy any longer. O've done wid him."

"What's the trouble now?" said Mr. Prince.

"Well," said the man, "this morning O'l thought it was toime to get his igsillincy out of bed, for he had been drunk about a week and in bed most of the toime, and so O'l went to him and says gentle-loike, 'Would your igsillincy have a cup of coffee?' when he rose up and shtruck me in the face. On that O'l took him by the collar, lifted him out of bed, took him across the room, showed him his ugly face in the glass, and O'l said to him, says O'l, 'Is thin the eyes of an invoy plenpotentiary?'"—From the Autobiography of Andrew D. White.

HUMMING BIRDS.

Feeding the Bantlings Looks Like a Dangerous Operation.

When I first crawled in among the bushes close to the nest the little mother darted at me and poised a foot from my nose, as if to stare me out of countenance. She looked me all over from head to foot twice. Then she seemed convinced that I was harmless.

She whirled and sat on the nest edge. The bantlings opened wide their hungry mouths. She spread her tail like a flicker and braced herself against the nest side. She craned her neck and drew her dagger-like bill straight up above the nest. She plunged it down the baby's throat to the hilt and started a series of gestures that seemed fashioned to puncture him to the toes. Then she stabbed the other baby until it made me shudder. It looked like the murder of the infants. But they were not mangled and bloody. They were getting a square meal after the usual humming bird method of regurgitation.

They ran out their slender tongues to lick the honey from their bills. How they liked it! Then she settled down and ruffled up her breast feathers to let her babies cuddle close to her naked bosom. Occasionally she reached under to cress them with whisperings of mother love.—Country Calendar.

There seems to be no art of knowledge in fewer hands than that of discerning when to have done.—Swift.
