The creamery product that sets on this market in the shape of butter would pass much better as a second hand sample of oleomargarine. It sells for 30 cents a pound and is not as good as the common country butter brought into the stores at 15 to 20 cents a pound.

The first of October Kansas people will have a flat two-cent rate if the railroads obey the order of the railroad commissioners made at the hearing in Topeka recently. The railroads refused to accept the order of the railroad commissioners to present any evidence which might be thought to be necessary to show the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the two-cent rate in Kansas. State house officials generally believe that the railroads will grant the rate. They seem to have a hint from some other place that this would be done after the proper show of resistance was made by the roads, so the two cent fare is confidently expected to appear October 1st.

What Does a High School Do For a Young Man?

(A. E. Winship in Neb. Teacher.)

One of the most absurd of the old foggy notions is that high school does not pay.

First, that it does not pay the student.

Second, that it does not pay the public.

Look at the absurdity of those propositions.

Without the equivalent of a high school education one cannot enter any college, university, or first class professional normal school, cannot become a physician, lawyer, preacher or teacher, civil engineer, mining engineer, architect, or enter any other profession.

Hereafter, not to go to a school of academy is to close the door of hope, prospect or aspiration for professional life.

There are a hundred thousand of the best business positions in mercantile houses, manufacturing plants and railroad corporations in the United States for which no young man will be considered at all unless he has the equivalent of a high school education.

There are a hundred thousand of the best places in industrial establishments in which a young man will get extra good pay and a sure job immediately upon graduation, because he has graduated.

Andrew Carnegie has given as a reason for the great success of his steel plants that he was the manufacturer to buy scholarships and pay a premium on it.

When a prominent railroad man said that he would employ no young man for any position that had promotion ahead who had not at least a high school education, was asked what he meant by it in view of the fact that neither he nor his associates had such an education, he replied: "There was no high school for me when I was a young man, but today a high school education is so easy that a boy who will not get it shows that he cares more for getting to work than he does for getting ready to work."

The four years that a boy works while he might be in a night school amount to little. Few boys of this class have a hundred dollars in the bank by the time they have graduated, and that means not more than six dollars a year for life, whereas, in any line of work a fellow can earn ten to fifteen times six dollars a year more if he had made good use of his high school opportunities.

There are several cities in which the business houses have a standing offer for earnest high school graduates whom the principal will recommend, and at a wage greater to start with than they would be getting if they had been out at work for the four years.

In a variety of ways it is easy to demonstrate that a young man gains for life, financially, by getting ready for life work.

Second, does it pay the public? On the average graduates of the high schools pay ten times as much taxes, directly and indirectly, as those who have not had any education above the grammar school, taken as a whole.

Of course this can only be applied where there has been a good free public high school for at least thirty years, but it is true wherever there has been a high school for ten years, if we take only persons of the age that would have given them an opportunity to have gone to the high school.

Or, if you confine the comparison to those who actually graduated from the grammar school and went to school no more, with those who did go to school for a higher preparation for work, and the taxes they pay into the treasury, directly and indirectly, are decidedly greater than that by the former class.

This is easily demonstrated when we consider the taxes on the houses in which they live, the places in which they do business and on the various places of business and professional men whom they patronize.

Indirect taxation is all too little considered in educational economies.
