Chief Game Warden Carter has succeeded in getting the Niobrara military reservation in Nebraska set aside as game reserve, or has practically obtained that end through an order issued by the president of the United States prohibiting shooting on the reservation. As it is already well stocked with small game it will serve as an admirable breeding place and the surrounding territory will get the benefit of the increase in game if the state game department can protect the game after it gets on the reservation. The reservation comprises 60 sections of land. The army post upon it has been abandoned, but the government keeps men on the land to care for the property.—State Journal.
