Very respectfully,
July 9, 1908.
CHAS. S. LUDLOW,
Co-Operative Observer.

SENATOR ASHTON of Grand Island has announced his candidacy for the nomination on the democratic ticket for Congress. Mr. Ashton is a clean young man and a hustler and will give the people of his district honest representation if elected.

The fact that the machinery trust has been able to control legislation enough to cause a prohibitory tariff to be put upon all articles manufactured by them, and that the farmers of United States have to pay almost double the price for these same articles than do the farmers of England and other European countries is a strong argument that there should be tariff revision. Of course, the republicans have promised to revise the tariff, but they have not said whether it would be up or down. This is a matter in which the farmers are vitally interested and one which they should give much thought and study.

There has come when a number of laws for the safety and comfort of the working people must be enacted. It is a startling and well known fact that America is more than a score of years behind nearly all of the European countries in providing for the welfare of her laboring classes. We should not only be abreast but ahead of Europe in such legislation. England, France, Germany, Switzerland and even Italy have gotten past the wicked doctrine that the working man is merely a commodity, a machine or wagon. They have made to carry its load as long as possible and then thrown away when worn out. The laboring-man is just as human as any-one else, and deserves laws that will protect himself and family. You cannot deal with him as with his wife and family as you would with a carpet or chair, or a coat or a hat. The human element enters into it. It will take but a few years to put laws upon the statute books that will do away with the now existing evils. But who can you trust to bring about this desired result? Will Taft, who for the past twenty years has been fighting the laboring-man, see that such laws are made? No, we answer. Just as he issued injunctions against the laboring man twenty years ago, so would he, if elected president, bring all his influence to bear to defeat any legislation that would be of benefit to the working classes. Can we look to W. J. Bryan for support in passing these much needed laws? Yes, we answer. Just as he labored and fought in congress twenty years ago to have laws passed that would benefit the laboring-man, so will he go on fighting to the end that the great masses of laboring-men may be benefited. Again we say, it is only to the democratic party that the laboring-man can look for relief.

REPUBLICAN TRUST PLANK VAGUE.
The trust plank must prove a disappointment to every republican who has come to understand the iniquity of the trusts. There is no demand for a rigid enforcement of the law, there is no suggestion that the criminal clause which has not yet brought the trust manufacturer within the walls of a penitentiary should be called into use. The platform says that the law can be strengthened by amendments which will enlarge the supervision of the general government, but these amendments are not mentioned and there is nothing in this plank of the platform that can be expected to secure any real improvement in the law. If the President, with all of his stonometry, has not been able to enforce the criminal law against a single trust, what progress can be made with such an anti-trust plank as that inserted in the republican platform?

"There is a plank in the platform in favor of such legislation and supervision as will prevent the future over-issue of stocks and bonds by interstate carriers."
"This is good, but it is coupled with the advocacy of a pooling arrangement which makes a large concession to the railroads without exacting any security to the public for the convention voted down an amendment proposed by Senator La Follette's followers authorizing an enlargement of the powers of the interstate commerce commission."—Ex.

Like Bryan Now.

Newsprintmen coming into Lincoln from other cities, are already greatly impressed by the changed and improved attitude of Lincoln people toward Mr. Bryan. Nine correspondents of the Kansas City Star, for example, wires his paper a long story headed "Neighbors Like Bryan Now," in which he says:

There will be no necessity for Mr. Bryan going away from home to be informed of his nomination, as there was in 1896 and 1900. Time was when the very name of Bryan was reviled and jeered in his home city. Visitors who came to confer with him were made to feel that the "home folks" regarded him and all he stood for with contempt. Bryan's friends everywhere resented the narrow-minded provincialism of the Lincoln citizenship. His admirers marveled that he was content to remain here. The neighboring city of Omaha was more broad-minded, and the friends there of the democratic leader held out every inducement for Bryan to move. The appeal was vain. Bryan may have cherished resentment, but if so he gave no outward indication of it. Not even his closest personal and political friends can recall a time when he spoke bitterly of the treatment given him by his neighbors.

The correspondent, after narrating a number of instances of the mean and narrow spirit with which his fellow townsmen treated him, in years gone by, goes on to say that "Bryan has won the people of Lincoln. It is perhaps his greatest triumph. Day by day and week by week, Bryan wore down these prejudices." He speaks of the public spirit Mr. Bryan has manifested, his simple democracy, his genuine interest in the intellectual, moral and religious life of the city. He tells how Mrs. Bryan showed that remarkable diplomacy which has stamped her as a remarkable woman, indicating no resentment, entering into every work for the advancement of our community, "at all times gracious, at all times democratic, at no time patronizing." And now:
"Mr. Bryan is recognized as Lincoln's foremost citizen. One hears nothing but complimentary references to him. Lincoln is just as demonstrative in its newly found pride as was Canton of McKinley, as Oyster Bay of Roosevelt, and its foremost citizens takes the honors which his neighbors delight to thrust upon him with the same good nature as he did their miserable attempts to show him disrespect."

The World-Herald with hearty goodwill, congratulates Lincoln that it has put itself right in the eyes of the world. By honoring Bryan it honors its own good manners and good sense. It no longer impresses visitors as provincial, bigoted, narrow-minded and small-spirited, but as a city that deserves the good fortune of being Mr. Bryan's home.

SEEK TO IMPROVE ON NATURE.

Enterprising Men Are Raising Butterflies for the Market.

At a time when all sorts of animals and plants are bred to a large scale, it is not wholly astonishing endeavors should have been made to raise rare, beautiful and valuable butterflies by artificial means. In fact, the first butterfly farm was established some years ago by an English entomologist, William Watkins, at Eastbourne, a small channel harbor, who has devoted to the industry extensive grounds covering an area of about an acre in extent, protected against ocean winds and planted with flowers, shrubs and trees. In this farm many thousands of insects of varied species move about in a state of perfect liberty, inside a high lattice-work fence, which separates them from the outside world till they are purchased by collectors at high prices.

Similar plants, in which more elaborate methods of butterfly breeding are employed, have of recent years been installed, the best known being those founded by Dr. Hughes, at Chomera, and by Mr. Andre, at Macon.—Technical World.

Scotchman an Almost Perfect Example of Physical Manhood.
Ledge, the most perfect specimen of manhood ever seen in our modern world, had an aversion to athletics almost akin to horror, says the New York Press. He was a wholesale dealer in plumbing supplies on a large scale in Glasgow, six feet ten inches in height and built like an Olympian god. He never trained for anything. He refused to witness athletic exhibitions. But he seemed to absorb strength from the earth or the atmosphere, and could easily handle any four men in Scotland. He could throw Hackenschmidt over his shoulder with one hand.

WON GLORY IN GREAT MUTINY.
"Boyle of Arrah" One of Last Survivors of Gallant Band.

The death, in his eighty-sixth year, of "Boyle of Arrah" removes one of the few survivors, if there are any left, of one of the conspicuously gallant exploits of the great mutiny in India. Richard Vickers Boyle, to give him his proper name, and a proper fighting name it is, was at the outbreak of the mutiny an engineer in charge of the construction of the East India railway at Arrah, which is in northern Bengal. At the first rumor of the outbreak the women and children were sent to Dinapore, and the Englishmen and Eurasians, supplemented by 50 faithful Sikhs, shut themselves up in Boyle's bungalow. Herwald Wake, magistrate of the district, took charge and left a record of the siege written on the whitewashed walls; "in case we should be scragged." The rebels had cannon, and the attack was fierce, but the little garrison held out from July 28 till August 2, when Vincent Eyre defeated the natives and relieved the siege. Boyle, who was the strategist and engineer of the defense, planning fortifications with great skill, was made a companion of the order of the Star of India, and also received a grant of land in the neighborhood. And ever since he has been "Boyle of Arrah."

Wanted—A Clock.
An Ohio country couple took the train into Cleveland not very long ago to do a bit of shopping. They especially desired a clock.

"Now," said the obliging salesman, who came to answer their wants, "here is something most attractive in the way of clocks. When the hour begins, a bird comes out from the top and sings 'cuckoo'! For example, I turn this hand to four o'clock, and the bird comes out and sings 'cuckoo' four times.

"Well, well, doesn't that beat the deuce!" exclaimed the husband, admiringly. "Mira, let's take one."
"No, sire!" objected Mira, decidedly. "Them clocks is all right for folks that's got lots o' time on their hands, but it'd take me half the day taking care o' that bird!"—Illustrated Sunday Magazine.
