ELLIOTT A. BOYL.

Season 1907 '08.

It is with pleasure that we present Elliott A. Boyl. He has the rare faculty of combining scholarship and oratory. Some lectures are filled with scholarly thoughts some with wit and humor, some with sentiment, and some are dramatic, but in these lectures you have a wealth of thought worthy of any scholar, made luminous with wit and humor, beautiful by word paintings, electrified by dramatic eloquence and, best of all, the whole is sanctified by good common sense. If you want a good, witty, entertaining, eloquent and scholarly lecture; one that will be an incentive to realizing the fullest possibilities of man; a lecture that will make your community better, then secure Elliott A. Boyl, and you can rest assured that neither committee nor people will be disappointed. Mr. Boyl has been with us two seasons. We have never had a complaint on him, and his "Extra Fine" reports, both to us and in Lyceumite, outnumber all his others. We received but one report on him last season below 100.

The American woman has reached a point where she is taking the keenest interest in the politics of her country. It is no longer left for the English woman to claim that she, among the women of the world, is without a part as an ardent follower of things political. The American woman is now coming forward as a warm political enthusiast.

Such is the deduction drawn by observers who have been watching the attendance of woman at the Denver convention and who watched the attendance of the feminine contingent at the recent Republican convention at Chicago. Old attendants at American conventions declare that never before have the convention halls been thronged with as many women as has been the case this year.
