"After the revolutionary war, when Gen. Washington went up from New burgh to visit Gen. George Clinton at Kingston, the two putriots sat be neath the sprending branches of this oak and for hours recounted the events of the long struggle and doubtless discussed plans for the future welfare of the country. Who may know but that some of the benefits which we enjoy to-day under the institutions of our government are results of the discussions of those two great patriots be neath this grand old tree? I brought myself to think so, at any rate.

"A few miles from this historic old oak, an old resident informed me, is another tree which besides being an ancient landmark is something of a curiosity. It is a chestnut tree, with a trunk 21 feet in circumference, from which about six feet from the ground a white elm of large size has grown. The chestnut trunk completely encloses that of the elm, and the explanation of the curious association is that at some time a branch of the chestrut was broken off, leaving a cavity in which in time mould and vegetable matter collected and made Filitable depth of soil for the seed of the clin, which ledged therein to germinate and graw and become a tree, a verificate part of its unprotesting host. the managedh chestruit

Boy Groping With a Problem.

A bright boy who writes letters and 'ennipositions" for his mother as a "home study," but has time enough for baseball, had this to say in one of his recent productions: "Archie - can't be first base because Harold's mother won't let him play with a driver's boy. Archie is a bully player, even if his father delves a team, I sent Harold's mother what was in my Christmas book about poor boys. It was that Virgil was the son of a porter. Sir Richard Arkwright was the son of a barber, Franklin was a tallow chandler, Oliver Cromwell's father kept a brewery, Aesop was just a slave. Dickens was a reporter and Ben Jonson was a bricklayer But Barobi's mother fold him that was long ago, and it don't go now, so I do not know what to do to get Archie.
