

Simplicity

The simplicity of operation of any self-filling fountain pen depends wholly upon its simplicity. The more complicated its construction and operation, the more liable it is to break or get out of order.

CONKLIN'S Self-Filling Fountain Pen is simple—absolutely so. No plungers, valves or leather washers, to wear out. No pumping, no friction, nothing to unscrew or twist, no inked fingers, no loose parts or worry. Just a dip in any ink and a simple touch on the Crescent-Filler fills and cleans it instantly. As for the old-fashioned dropper-filler fountain pen—well, nobody wants to bother with a separate filler these days.

A trial will convince you that the Conklin writes with a luxurious smoothness and certainty that you didn't imagine was possible in any fountain pen. Come in and try it.

Watt Holmgren
A quiet wedding occurred in Judge Edson's office Wednesday. The contracting parties were Mr. Chas. Holmgren and Miss Lizzie Watt. The young gentleman is a son of our esteemed townsman Gus Holmgren, and the bride is the daughter of Henry Watt living south of Guide Rock. The Holmgrens and Watts are old settlers of the county, coming here before the automobiles took the place of the buffaloes and while the country was yet in its infancy. The young couple have grown up in this county and both are held in highest esteem by all their acquaintances. Today the wedding dinner will be celebrated at the home of the bride's parents, or perhaps we should say the parents of Mrs. Chas. Holmgren. The Chief extends the glad hand and wishes the newly married pair a long, blissful state of conjugal felicity.
