Caldwell Phares
 The marriage ceremony uniting Miss Eudora Caldwell and Mr. Chas. P. Phares was solemnized last night at the home of the bride's parents, at 8:45 the Rev. A. A. Cressman of the Congregational church officiating. Mr. Harry Gilman of this city acted as best man and Miss Irma Vance of Hastings was bride's maid.
 Only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties were present. They were the recipients of many useful and handsome presents.
 The young couple have grown to maturity in this community and are highly esteemed by all. The young lady is the eldest daughter of our ex-mayor J. O. Caldwell and has been prominent in church and social circles. She is an accomplished person of worth and ability and will preside over the new household creditably and efficiently. The groom is a graduate of our city high school completing the prescribed course with honor. He afterwards pursued a course in the state agricultural school to perfect himself in his chosen vocation of farming.
 The young couple will spend their honeymoon on their farm north of this city where the groom has lately erected a comfortable home for his charming bride.
 Both are members of the Congregational church and are active in promoting enterprises that are for the betterment of this community.
 The Chief together with a long list of friends offers heartiest congratulations.
Am I Right?
 Our country like all countries has its two classes; producers and consumers. Our great natural resources and exhilarating atmosphere and inventive genius have all combined to make us great as a people in the field of utility products. We have become a nation of producers and wealth gainers in the past; inasmuch that a great immigration from many countries of a leech-like and lazy non-producing class has come to us to live easily and fatten their purses from our plethora of products. And again our prosperity has been so great that the sciences, arts, letters and leisure has claimed a large portion of our native citizenship—at least it has come to this: Our immense strides in wealth production has gained, not only monies and resources untold, but a vast portion of our population who are non-producers which at present gives us a greater per cent as consumers only, than we have ever had before. That production and consumption, or supply and demand, ever have and ever will govern and regulate prices of utilities and costs of living, is held as axiomatic. Yet we must not forget that the money condition of a country will occasion many an eddy in markets and expense accounts. Great production with a growing home and world market or demand, as we have had in past years, and increased wealth pouring in from new fields of the precious metals, have all caused us to forsake the hard service of the producer in field and factory—and to join the great host, who as consumers only, seek the line of least resistance in the affairs of life.
 Now the present high prices prevailing in the food-supply lines are not to be wondered at. It is not so much the high cost of living that bothers us even at the present time, but rather, it is the cost of high living. We are so intermingled, the wealthy and the poorer classes, that ostentation—one of the most prevalent contagious known to society—is readily propagated. If wealthy Mr. A eats sirloin and porter house, his poorer neighbor, to whom it tastes just as good, but whose purse can ill afford it, says, "I too must have the choice cuts of beef on my table," and as long as the rich man's demand holds out, just so long will the butcher continue to get high prices from both rich and poor alike if they both continue buying of him. Now if the poorer man, or our poorer classes, stop buying and boycott the butcher, and the rich still have the price to feed their cultured tastes, there will be no permanent change in prices, unless it be to push them up still higher. The present limited boycott on the butcher will not tend to reduce prices permanently. Only over production or high money can do that: for this reason, we as a people are over prone to live up to the limit of our income and the laboring class especially so. Hence the present boycott on beef will only tend to force a few small dealers to close shop—a few cents reduction may be quoted in a few places—a few 'ready to market' beeves may be rushed in at once and some feeders stop their supply and a few cease breeding for beef; but the reaction will soon set in—pasture will tide the present stockers over—the wealth of the plutocrat will not be lessened obviously—the meat-hungry laborer will return with raven to his meat feast, and butcher, packer and farmer will get higher prices than ever before.
