several clothing concerns, full settlement by two companies, several minor riot scares, which failed to materialize, and a report that the garment strike would extend to eastern cities. constituted Thursday's activities in the garment workers' strike here. There is a well defined feeling among labor leaders that the backbone of the strike is broken, and there is little fear that it will spread to other cities. The feeling of the strikers that the tide has turned in their favor came with the signing of an agreement by Cohn, Rissman & Co. and Alschuler, Dreyer & Co., by which 500 men are to return to work for each firm. No mention of wages is made in the agreement, which provides for forty-eight hours' work each week for cutters and fifty-four hours for miscellaneous employes. The agreement also gives the firms the right to use the union label and is held by the strikers to be a victory.

The right to have a monster parade through the business district was refused the strikers when a committee sought that privilege from the chief of police. An effort first was made to get permission from Mayor Busse, but the committee was unable to find him.
