A Meal of Bread

Our Bread is so nutritious that you can make a meal on it that is thoroughly refreshing and strengthening.
We have made it a point to use none but the best of flour in its preparation, and cleanliness has not been sacrificed. When you partake of it you will say that "the bread that mother used to bake" cannot be compared with it. Fresh bread daily, and plenty of it, does much to keep the health of the family. It is truly the staff of life.

QUIET DAYS

"Marjory, I love you—but if you ever mention 'rest cure' to me again our friendship will be a thing of the past!"

"Why this terrible threat?" asked Marjory. "I merely said—"

"If you'll listen to my experiences you'll understand. Don't interrupt until I finish."

"Our family physician said, 'That child is completely run down and she must have a complete rest at once.' I am 'that child.' Dressmakers, hat-makers, hairmakers, shoemakers, dancers, parties, luncheons, dinners and theaters had combined to do the mischief."

"My Aunt Susy lives in a two by four town where everything is supposed to be quiet and restful. I wrote to her asking if I might rest under her peaceful roof. She answered, 'Of course, come at once. I'm lonesome for you and I promise to provide you with a genuine rest cure.'"

"The day after the arrival of this letter I and my new seal suitcase started for Aunt Susy's at Johnson's Junction."

"Marjory, imagine my horrors on discovering, seated next me on the train, none other than the impossible, talkative Joe Simpson. He talked to me and at me until I was dizzy. I couldn't even get in a word of one syllable to break up his monologue."

"Auntie met us at the station on our arrival. In about two minutes she discovered that Joe Simpson's father was an old sweetheart of hers. My hospitable aunt invited him to dine with us that evening. Promptly he accepted, came and remained until half past 11 o'clock. It was cruelty to animals."

"Oh, Marjory, I had such beautiful anticipations of my first evening at auntie's—visions of sitting on the floor, with great logs blazing, Har-old's box of candy by my side and my braids hanging down my back! Instead, I found myself entertaining the uninteresting, ever talking Joe Simpson!"

"When he left auntie said, 'You do look fagged out, child. Go to bed this instant. I gave you the room upstairs, so you won't hear a sound. Sleep as long as you like tomorrow. I'll send your breakfast to your room.' Auntie is a dear."

"I did have a regular Rip Van Winkle sleep—that is, while it lasted. But at six o'clock the next morning I was awakened by a rapping and tapping and pounding on the roof above my head."

"I lay fascinated by the rhythm of the taps until seven o'clock. Then, in desperation, I dressed and descended.
Auntie was distressed that my first night's sleep had been broken off by the man who came to repair the roof.
It seems that man comes from the next town only twice a year, so when he does come the townfolk consider it a great honor if he condescends to repair their roofs. And such a noise as he made!"

"After eating the best waffles in the world, I felt somewhat consoled. But my consolation was short lived. For my Aunt Martha is a human question mark. I was just preparing to answer a thousand questions about the folks at home when in rushed the woman who lives next door, crying, 'Quick!
Come! My baby is in convulsions!'"

"We ran for doctors, nurses, medicines, hot water bags and other persons and things. The next 12 hours we devoted to nursing the baby and comforting the distracted mother. The baby recovered, I am thankful to say.
Probably it will never know what a disturbance it caused. But I will never forget that time."

"That night I had a splendid rest—slept until ten o'clock in the morning.
Then I woke up to find that our household was minus Mary Duggan."

"Mary Duggan is auntie's maid.
Mary Duggan's sister is Lizzie Duggan. Lizzie Duggan took suddenly ill.
She telegraphed for Mary to come to her at once. So it was up to auntie and me to wash dishes, cook, make beds, dust, bake, mend, and do all those other things."

"Then Aunt Susy's furnace had to act up. We couldn't have a fire until the fire pot was repaired. We huddled ourselves over one little oil stove that we borrowed from a neighbor. Did you ever try keeping warm over a bashful and backward oil stove? We almost froze to death."

"Then the minister's wife had to give a tea. We couldn't possibly send regrets to the minister's wife, so we went. She made us examine her plush albums containing the family portraits from antediluvian times. I could have screamed."

"The next evening a Mr. Dobbins and his three maiden sisters insisted upon calling on us. Auntie wasn't to blame—she couldn't ward them off."

"The next day Aunt Susy's euchre club met at her house. Mary Duggan being absent, auntie and I prepared and served luncheon for 26."

"The day after the luncheon, exhausted, I bade Aunt Susy and Johnson's Junction good by. I went home to rest. St. Simon Stylites, who stood on one foot for 39 years, was not half so tired as I was the day I arrived home."

"Now, Marjory, you won't ever suggest 'rest cure' to me again, will you dear?" demanded Dorothy.

"Never," promised Marjory, sympathetically.

BONAPARTE AND HIS RED MAN

Story of the Familiar of Napoleon, Disregard of Whose Advice Caused His Downfall.

The story of the Red Man was evidently current in Paris at the time of Napoleon's downfall. In a section headed "Bonaparte and His Familiar," contained in "News From the Invisible World," pp. 353-6 (one of Milner & Sowerby's publications, reissued in London, 1854), an anonymous correspondent, writing from Paris, names January 1, 1814, as the date when the mysterious visitant appeared. The account is given with much circumstan-tiality of detail, but differs materially from Cyrus Redding's version. Instead of being a person of small stature, the familiar was a tall man of imposing appearance, dressed all in red. Count Mole, in attendance on Napoleon, with orders to admit no person to his presence, was quite overawed by the mysterious stranger. He listened trembling at the door, and heard all that passed.

"The familiar, it seems, was not an embodiment of the enemy of mankind, but rather the 'genius' who presided over Napoleon's destiny. He ordered a certain course of action to be taken, and allowed three months for it to be carried into effect. Napoleon apparently refused to comply. They parted in anger, and in three months the emperor was a captive in Elba. "Even the French papers, when Bonaparte was deposed, recurred to this fact, and remarked that his mysterious visitant's prophetic threat had been accomplished." On three different occasions the Red Man appeared to the Emperor: in Egypt, after the battle of Wagram, and in January, 1814.

In the process of transmission through the crucible of fervent loyalist imagination the story seems to have been altered or mutilated.— Notes and Queries.

VALUE OF THE IMAGINATION

A Reasonable Amount of Day Dreaming Does Not Prove Detrimental to One's Interests.

Life naturally must be more interesting to the person of vivid imagination than to one who lives only for the tangible things about him and who fears to dream as his fancy wills because reality bears heavily upon him. We do not think that even the man of affairs would find the indulgence of a few day dreams detrimental to his interests, while to those who look only upon the serious side of life and share only its darker aspects, a few dreams of what perhaps may come to pass would act as a tonic upon tired nerves. Our dreams are often companions to us, and sometimes we find ourselves moving unconsciously with them in a world far removed from our real habitation, but one whose promises seem easy of fulfillment and whose delights compensate for some of the hardships we may, perhaps, be called upon to bear during our waking hours. The world which is our idea of happiness, with all its wonder of accomplishment and all its measure of appreciation—the world in which we naturally play an important part—who has not seen its shining sands, and lofty summits, and flowering paths, beckoning, ever beckoning, telling us how good it is to live and defying us to resist its appealing call? We cannot all gain its shores and discover long-hidden secrets, but, at least, we can turn its promises to our advantage and make our day dreams oases, as it were, in the desert spots of life.

The Need of Men.

More men are needed in the world today than ever before, because there is more to do—more different things to make, more actual people to support.
Fifteen years ago the bicycle-makers would have been frightened into bankruptcy if you had told them that in 1910 their trade would have almost disappeared. But what do we see now? The coming of automobiles has given work to all the bicycle men and thousands more. And it is so in other businesses and professions. The point to remember is that, while the form of work changes, the work in every field remains, and even increases. The real claims are not all taken up. Alexander the Great was only a fool when he wept because there were no more worlds to conquer. He didn't use his eyes to see with, but only to weep with.—Saint Nicholas.

Boy Millionaire.

I often call the boys of the public schools of New York millionaires, not because they have, or ever will have, millions of dollars of their own, but because they have millions upon millions of minutes to spend. A boy of ten, for example, has a prospect of living until he is 70, which means that he has a fortune of over 30, 000,000 of minutes. Of these millions he will have to spend nearly a third, or 10,000,000, in sleep, and another third in earning his food, shelter, clothing, and other necessities of life. But he will still have a large fortune to spend as he pleases. The failure or success, or at any rate the largeness or narrowness, of his life, will depend largely on how he chooses to spend this surplus.—Book of Knowledge.

Modern Improvements.

Patient—Doctor, I'm having an awful lot of trouble with the gas in my stomach. Doctor—Yes, yes, I know.
Those old-fashioned fixtures are giving people a lot of trouble this fall.
Just step into the next room, and I'll have my engineer wire you for electric lights.—Puck.
