About The City

Several years ago one of the local papers, either the Nation or the Argus called attention to the block west of the Washington school, as being worthy imitation in one respect. The block contained no partition fences, nor was there a fence along its entire front. The buildings were all set back an equal distance from the pavement, leaving ample room for an extended lawn between the sidewalk and the houses; and there were no shrubs or gardens of any nature to interrupt the pleasant serenity of the sward. Young maples lined the walk on each side. These have since grown into stately trees and are kept trimmed to a sufficient height not to interfere with pedestrians on the sidewalk and permit an unobstructed view of the lawns from the street and attractive glimpses of the buildings. The slope is now crowned with the elegant mansion of Fred Turnure, who likewise follows the civic idea in the arrangement of his front yard. Judge Edson's place is also in line, and he has, likewise, improved his residence, while Frank Cowden has converted his former modest house into one of the fine buildings of the city. But what we particularly desired to note is the fact that this block was the first in the city to exhibit an unfenced harmony of fellow citizens, who could look beyond their individual lots and take into consideration the appearance of the entire block. While we could wish that other than maple trees had been used, not because maple trees are not the best trees for the purpose, but because we would like to see each block adorned with a different variety of trees, if possible, still, looked at as one block, this has long been one of the ideal blocks in the city for the reasons we have indicated above. Its example has done much to educate the people of the city. By far the greater proportion of the residence blocks west of Webster street are now unenclosed, and the entire Platt addition is being developed to secure a general unity of appearance.

The Sherwood corner on Third Avenue and Seward is a fine illustration of what can be done to make the grounds more attractive by a proper arrangement of the trees. This corner was once one of the most dismal parts of the city. The trees had been suffered to grow in such exuberance of foliage that the sun could not visit the lawn with its gladness and life. The trees have been trimmed, the houses set farther back, and there is now no prettier spot in the city. Of course, the new building, perhaps the handsomest in the town, adds something to the general result. But, even were there no building there, the spot would still be a delight to the eye of the passer-by.

Take for instance the corner of Fifth Avenue and Seward street. Miss Igon has erected a new building there, but it is not a pretentious structure, neither is the Lindsey residence west; but we know of few, if any, places in the city more attractive to the sense of peaceful beauty than the block which faces south on Fifth Avenue between Seward and Walnut Streets.

It is not the purpose of the Chief to criticize the buildings of the city. Each lot owner must be governed by own taste and his own purse in the matter of buildings. Few of them can be substantially changed. They are what they are, and we must make the best of them. But it is an easy matter to take care of the trees, to take a block view instead of a lot view of the matter in arranging the front yard, to look for block unity and harmony instead of lot peculiarities, to consider one's neighbor and the general public instead of our individual selves, and there is no reason why all the people in the city should not make their front yards more agreeable to all than they now are.

In this connection we wish to speak, not individually, but generally, of some lots whose trees, notwithstanding their great beauty, are really an annoyance to the people of the city because their branches are permitted to spread too low. No tree should be suffered to let its branches hang low enough to twist an umbrella from the head of a pedestrian, much less knock off his hat.

Circus Stranded at Fairbury.

The Campbell Brothers Consolidated Shows, which have traveled all over the United States in the past seventeen years, is in Fairbury, Nebraska, "stranded." For a number of years the First National bank of this city has been backing up the Campbell brothers' circus and the concern is heavily in debt to this bank. A conference was held with the Campbell brothers and the creditors in Fairbury, but no satisfactory adjustment has been reached and the circus is still camped here. Both of the advertising cars are also in the city. The Campbell brothers circus is a Fairbury institution and originated in Fairbury in 1893, when it started out as a dog show.—Hastings Tribune.

Dr. Winifred Viers located with Dr. J. W. Marsville special attention given to Obstetrics and particularly to diseases of women and children.
