THE CHIEF OFFICE

As We See Other People's Yards

The Yellowstone Park has some grander scenery than Red Cloud can exhibit, yet, as a daily sight we would rather look out on Alf. McCall's terrace than on Old Faithful.

Mr. McConkey has a number of pretty things in his yard, but those young cherry trees, for thriftiness of growth, uniformity and beauty, are really hard to beat.

Of this year's new buildings Mr. Blackledge's gives the most promise of permanent pleasure to the outsider.

Ed Platt has done more towards making his place home-like with trees, vines and garden than most of his neighbors in the new addition.

County Attorney Maurer has changed a bleak looking corner into one of the show places of the city in a very brief period. He promises the Chief some fine strawberries next year, and our mouth has begun to water already.

Jud Bailey's porch satisfies our idea as to what a porch ought to be, although the foundation looks somewhat more substantial and expensive than need be.

We have not noticed an alley in the city that gives any pleasure to anybody. It was very unfortunate that somebody originated the plan of lining the alley with trees. The result is that there are very few of them through which a load of hay can be driven. Of course, the trees make a nice shade for the horse shoes pitchers, but the shade would have been as much had the trees been planted farther from the lot line.

A lady called our attention to our previous remarks about the front yard of Mr. Cutter's, and suggested that we ought to have noticed the back yard. We instantly and defensively suggested that the backyard was not the business of the sauntering public. But we were agreeably surprised to hear her say that Cutter's back yard was prettier than the lawn in front. Of course, we expected just the opposite. So we were unexpectedly pleased in two ways: First, one lady was willing to give another lady credit, since Mrs. Cutter was given the praise for the flowers and shrubbery next to the alley; Second, we learned that the Cutter grounds deserved more praise than we had given them.

Some of our readers have asked us when we were going to mention the lots which deserved especial censure. We will do that soon enough to satisfy the lot owner, if not soon enough to satisfy the grumbling public.

Others have asked us to wait a few days before visiting their part of the city. We can only advise general readiness, because we know not when time will serve, or when copy will be required.

Seed Corn Selection Week—Sept. 30 to October 5th

Omaha, Aug. 26th—In order to obviate poor seed corn next year, if possible, the State University and the Publicity Bureau of the Commercial Club are planning a seed corn selection week this fall. Prof. C. W. Pugsley, head of the Extension department of the State Farm will compile the necessary suggestions for the selection and proper care of seed corn, and the Bureau of Publicity will endeavor to distribute this information to the citizens of the State.

There are many reasons why seed corn should be picked out early this year," says Prof. Pugsley:

First—The crop in the state is from one to three weeks late, thus increasing the chances of the seed being damaged by early frosts and freezes.

Second—This has been a cool season. Early frosts and freezes usually follow cool summers.

Third—Nebraska has no surplus seed on hand.
