BE ON THE SAFE SIDE

It is true that you are not likely to lose your savings if deposited in any good bank—but you are ABSOLUTELY CERTAIN NOT to lose them when you deposit where you have the additional protection of the State Guaranty Law. Such protection is offered you here.

It is surely "good business" to deposit where you get absolutely guaranteed protection, in preference to placing money in a bank that guarantees nothing.

The State Guaranty Law is behind every dollar deposited in this bank, and when you open an account here, you are ON THE SAFE SIDE.

Automobile Will Be Given Away On June 14, 1913

The closing date of the Chief's big subscription contest has been set for Saturday, June 14 at 3 p. m. This is the only date that has ever been announced for this contest to close and it will positively come to a close at just that time and the prizes consisting of a Ford Touring car, a genuine Diamond ring and a fine Solid Gold Watch will be awarded to the three contestants having the largest number of votes to their credit.

This contest has been going on for the past six weeks, but like all other contests of this character the real enthusiasm comes during the last few weeks of the race. Now that the end is in sight we are expecting the interest to wax warm, and that everyone in the community will be given an invitation by one of the candidates, to subscribe for the Chief.

In talking over the contest from the start with our contestants, the management of the Chief promised to employ some contest expert to assist with the details of the work towards the end of the contest. In this regard we wish to say that we have made arrangements with C. M. Husted of the Nebraska Farmer Company, of Lincoln, who has had charge of contest work for a number of years, to assist us. Mr. Husted is with us this week calling on the contestants, and he would be pleased to meet anyone interested in any way with the contest, or anyone who is interested in seeing any one of the contestants secure one of the prizes. He will be pleased to give special instructions to all contestants and to assist them in any manner whatever.

In order to assist the contestants in increasing their votes from now on we are going to give them the privilege of soliciting subscriptions for "Nebraska's Real Farm Paper" The Nebraska Farmer, of Lincoln in connection with the Chief. We are also going to give the people of this locality a real bargain in the two papers. The regular subscription price of the Nebraska Farmer is $1.00 per year. The rate of the Chief, as you all know is $1.50 per year.

During the contest we will make a special price of the Chief for one year and the Nebraska Farmer for the rest of this and all of next year for even two dollars. This is only fifty cents more than the price of the Chief for one year. That fifty cents given the subscriber the Nebraska Farmer for twenty months—almost two years—and the subscription to the Nebraska Farmer will count for one thousand extra votes for the contestant who secures the subscription. The Nebraska Farmer is published every week.

Contestants should notice the voting schedule in the large advertisement this week. This voting schedule will hold good during the balance of the contest, with the exception that special inducements may be offered at certain times for a certain number of subscriptions. It will be to the interest of every contestant to secure the subscriptions for the two papers from now on at the combination price. The contestant who is the most successful in securing the combination subscriptions will stand the best opportunity to be the owner of the Ford Touring car on June 14th.

Will of J. Pierpont Morgan.

The last will and testament of the eminent financier has received eulogistic comments from many of the clergy and a large proportion of the metropolitan press. To the Chief the will is remarkable for its hypocritical pretense of Christian piety. It commences with a paragraph, in which the man who devoted a life to public rapine and plunder commends his soul to his Maker as a white and redeemed thing, made so by the blood of Jesus; but, with uncounted millions to dispose of, he makes no mention of, or provision for, the people with whom Jesus identified himself. It is the most un-Christian, irreligious document, in its want of actual charity, ever published as the last solemn act of a professedly Christian millionaire.

Selfish, exclusive, unsocial in life, he died as he lived, an extreme example of the Mammon worshipper, who says in his heart, what ever he may say with his lips, "There is no God".

How shall his spirit meet that of the first great American financier, Robert Morris, the patriot who financed the revolutionary struggle, who equipped Washington's army at his own expense for the march against Cornwallis at Yorktown, and died in a debtor's prison?

How shall he stand before the contempt of that other Philadelphia financier, Stephen Girard, whose heart was embittered against the hypocrites of the religious pretenders of his day? Girard founded a great institution where every American youth might obtain the highest education he desired. He accompanied his sneer at the false pretenses of others with the most generous benefaction to his race.

Morgan professes the holiest faith with his lips and denies Jesus and humanity with his deed.

With what assurance shall Morgan come into the presence of the great New Yorker, whose wealth was the due reward of industrial enterprise and genius, Peter Cooper?

Cooper's name and memory are among the highest inspirations of his city, and, while his noble benefactions endure, they will aid, instruct and stimulate the youth of America to lofty endeavor and generous living. The name of Morgan will be a by-word and a hissing.

What will Morgan answer to the great founder of his house and wealth, George Peabody? Twenty-one thousand people in London live cheaply, comfortably, and independently in the homes Peabody's wise philanthropy founded, and the philanthropy was built on such sound foundations that the increase of the homes keeps pace with the growing population of that vast city. He also remembered his native land with institutions and benefactions which removed all the obliquity from the possession of great wealth.

Morgan has made the possession of riches a reproach. There is no benefaction, not an object of charity or public good which the great financier remembers in his will. How shall he face the indignation of the great masters of painting and statuary? They painted and chiseled, not for individuals, but for humanity. They dreamed not to sell the products of their genius and art for vast sums of money, that they might minister to the exclusive enjoyment of the unappreciative few who value them, not for their actual worth, but their market price. Morgan purchased the creations of the world's great teachers and hid them from the gaze of the multitude, and his last words to earth were to keep them hidden.

There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day.

And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table. And it came to pass, that the beggar

Will Make Babies Immune to Tuberculosis

An interesting experiment for the purpose of creating immunity against tuberculosis is being tried in Pittsburgh under the direction of the Tuberculosis League of that city. Dr. William Charles White, Medical Director of the League, says it will probably take ten years before definite results of the work will be appreciated. The experiment is being conducted on the theory that much, if not all, tuberculosis infection begins in childhood. In view of this fact, the League is aiming to supervise the growth of every baby born for the next ten years in the South Side district of Pittsburgh. The babies and their mothers will be taken in charge at the birth of the infant, and everything possible will be done to increase the resisting power of the child to disease and to make it thereby immune to tuberculous infection. The theory of the Society is that by fortifying the body in the earliest period of a child's life, the in-died, and was carried to Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died, and was buried.

And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seethed Abraham afar off and Lazarus on his bosom. And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame. There are a million of people like Lazarus in New York City, but Morgan let them lay at his gate unnoticed while he lived. He may now look upon them afar off.

Electricity in the House Does Not Attract Lightning

It is a common superstition, especially among older people, that electricity in the house will attract the lightning during a thunder shower. It is no uncommon sight to see men and women turning out the electric lamps and getting as far as possible from the electric fixtures during a severe thunder shower.

Lightning does not follow along electric light wires, except in rare instances and then to no great amount. If a large amount of lightning attempted to follow an electric wire along the street it would instantly burn up the wire. If a small portion of a lightning discharge attempted to enter the house via the electric light wires there is a little device located up in the attic, or down in the cellar, which is called a "fuse box," designed purposely to prevent any such entrance. The "fuse" is a bit of lead wire inserted in the electric circuit in such a manner that any attempt to force a large current over the circuit will instantly melt the lead wire and stop the flow of current. With the fuse melted out there is an inch or more of air gap between the house wires and the street, which is quite enough to stop any ordinary circuit which might try to run among the house wires. Current heavy enough to jump such an air gap would escape down the light pole outside.

The idea that electric motors, electric fans or any other electric devices for the home can "explode" is ridiculous. No dangerous explosives enter into their construction. Electricity itself cannot explode. It does not burn. Dangerous "shocks" exist only in the imagination. For years and years fire insurance companies have kept accurate records of fire causes and they have determined that electricity causes fewer fires than gasolene, kerosene, matches, gas and other things in daily use about the home.—Electric News Service.

Mrs. Amanda Cummings

Mrs. Amanda Cummings passed away at her home in this city on Sunday, April 20th, after a long illness from a complication of diseases. She was 64 years, 5 months and 13 days old at the time of her demise. Mrs. Cummings had been a resident of Webster county since the early seventies, and was the mother of four children, all of whom survive her. Funeral services were held from the Christian church on Tuesday, afternoon, Rev. Nau, conducting the services.

Robert F. Raines Called Home

Robert F. Raines was born in Southern, Ill., Nov. 19, 1868 and died in Red Cloud, Nebraska, April 20, 1913. He was 44 years 5 months and 1 day old at the time of death. He married Helen Aitkin Dec. 1, 1897. To this union was born two children, Helen and Robert. In early life he accepted Christ as a personal Savior and united with the Baptist church. Ever since he has let the world know that he was on the side of God and right. He was not a man of many words, but one that lived his religion every day. Time can only make us realize our loss as a church and a community. He loved humanity and one of the causes of his death was a long ride in that dreadful blizzard in March, to administer help to the sick and suffering. In 1908 he came to Nebraska on account of poor health. He settled in Beaver City and remained there until 1909 when he came to Red Cloud. Here has been his home ever since. In 1909 he was elected state Representative. He leaves on this side of the river, to follow later, his wife and children and a very large circle of friends. The funeral services were held from the home April 22, at 2 p. m. His pastor W. F. Cole officiating.
